PERHAPS it is nobody's business how you dress—and [illegible] the photographs on this page are rather startling. The young [illegible] women whose photographs are here shown are not actresses nor [illegible] they taken in fancy dress costume. These are photographs of well-[illegible] fashionable society women of New York, Boston and Chi[illegible]

It is a new fashion among the women of the "400" i[illegible] New York and of the smart sets of Boston, Chicago and other cities to [illegible] the breeches—when riding a horse.

Hitherto the custom of riding astride, alth[illegible] followed by many women, has not found favor in the most fashionable [illegible] in the [illegible] cities. The trouble is that divided skirts are not considered becomi[illegible] at woman's natural modesty is averse to any scantier fo[illegible] of dress. [illegible] however, a startling departure has been made in select c[illegible]. Much c[illegible] is naturally felt as to how far the new fashion will [illegible] carried.

The most daring and spectacular horsewoman wh[illegible] man's dress is Mrs. Ellen Rasmussen Tuttle, of Chicago. She is a very pretty and popular young woman in the most fashionable set. At the Wheaton Fair, a favorite gathering place of Chicago society, Mrs. Tuttle created astonishment and enthusiasm by riding into the ring in jockey costume. She actually competed with a professional negro jockey. A chorus of "Oh's" and "Ah's" and some feminine expressions of disapproval greeted the appearance of her lithe, white-clad figure. As a rule, the men were inclined to approve of the new departure.

Mrs. Tuttle's riding costume consisted of regular riding breeches of white linen, a long white linen coat cut like a man's frock coat and riding boots. When she dismounted she wore a long loose overcoat.

"My costume was made after a design of my own," said Mrs. Tuttle, "and I sat on a dummy horse for hours to be sure the skirts of the coat were cut as they should be."

Mrs. Tuttle won the race easily with her new costume. She rose in her short stirrups in approved Tod Sloan fashion and bent over her mount's neck until her face almost touched the mane. The man jockey lashed his horse and drew ahead for a few seconds, but Jockey Tuttle soon caught him, and came in two lengths to the good.

Another woman of fashion who has adopted masculine dress for riding is Mrs. "Tom" Pierce of Boston. She created quite a sensation with her new clothes at a recent run of the Meadow Brook Hunt Club, on Long Island. Her get-up was if possible even more picturesque than that of Mrs. Tuttle. She wore a pair of plain riding breeches, a man's hunting coat and a rough rider's hat. The clothes seemed to work well, for Mrs. Pierce rode much better and faster than any of the women, and than all but one man. Mr. Bryce Johnson fell off his horse and skinned his nose considerably in his violent efforts to keep up with Mrs. Pierce, and several other men had similar experiences.

The new style has also been adopted in a modified form by Mrs. "Tommy" Hitchcock, who is one of the best horsewomen in New York society and the Long Island hunting set.

Many women, of course, prefer to ride astride, and various devices of the nature of bloomers and divided skirts have been adopted with this object in view. Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Kernochan, Miss Waterbury and other well-known society women ride astride when they are at Asheville, and quiet country places, but they have not worn such startling and daring costumes as those of Mrs. Tuttle and Mrs. Pierce.

THE MIRACLE THAT HAPPENED TO THE BIG SHIP "SUEVIC."

2—Just as the lead was being cast, the Suevic, without warning, ran on Maentare rock, which tore several great holes in her bottom forward.

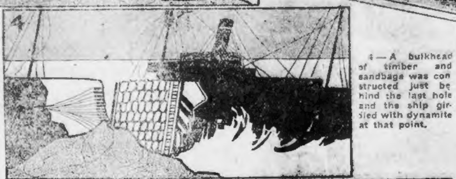
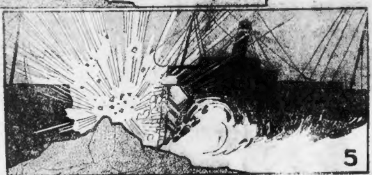
3—In the morning passengers were taken off, tugs made fast and every effort was made in vain to pull the big liner off the ledge.



4—A bulkhead of timber and sandbags was constructed just behind the last hole and the ship girdled with dynamite at that point.



5—The wreck was deserted and the dynamite fired, splitting the ship in two and letting the stern float away.

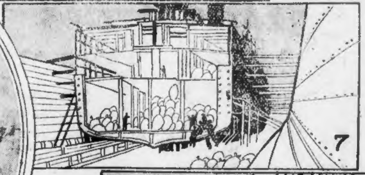
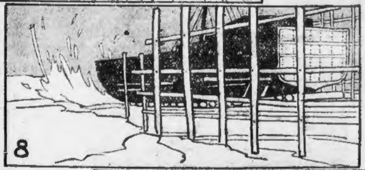
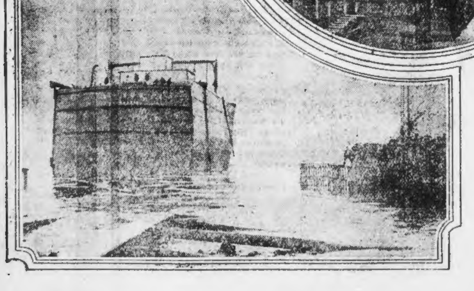
The Rescued Stern in Dry-dock Being Repaired.



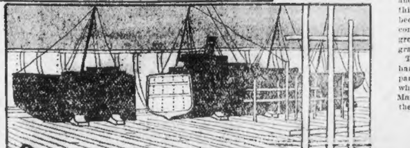
7.—In the dry dock there the bulkhead was removed and the remains of the ship prepared for a new bow.

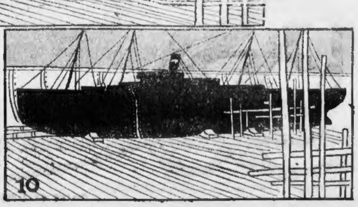


8—A new bow was built and launched at Belfast and towed to the dry dock at Southampton, where the rescued stern was being prepared for it.



The New Bow Just Launched.





9—The new bow was taken into the dry dock, fitted to the remainder of the Suevic, and the two parts of the vessel knitted together.

10—So perfe did the two pieces fit that when the last coat of paint was applied there was no visible sign of the greatest marine amputation ever perfer

THE big White Star liner Suevic has just recovered from the most extraordinary sea-amputation ever performed. To save the ship's life it was necessary to cut her in two on the ocean, an operation that has no parallel in marine history.

The Suevic now floats as staunch as ever, none the worse for the fact that her bow, the bow she was born with, and 200 feet more of her are being patiently pounded to pieces, rivet by rivet, on Maentare Rock, to the accompaniment of the dirge of the light house's fog horn.

The disaster that caused it all occurred last Summer. The Suevic, with a full complement of passengers and freight, was steaming through a fog one Sunday evening off the Scilly Islands, on the British coast. A stiff southwesterly gale was blowing, but the captain was confident of his position and sure that he had some half a dozen miles yet to go before he would reach the much-dreaded ledges.

The whistle on the liner roared at frequent intervals and was heard by the crew of the fog station, who did the best they could to warn the vessel. The forward watch reported once that they heard a fog signal, but the captain concluded it was another ship and rent the air with his own whistle in answer.

The majority of the women were listening to an entertainment in the saloon. Few men were on deck exercising in the foggy wind, others were settling comfortably for an evening at cards in the smoking room when suddenly everyone was knocked from their feet.

A deep boom like the blow of a sledge-hammer on an iron door came out of the depths of the ship, followed by a succession of rasping, grating sounds and the rending of steel. The ship stopped short. Then, as a following wave caught it under the stern, it moved forward a few feet and settled again with another crash of steel.

There were shouts of command on the bridge, and the engines shook the vessel in their efforts to pull her backward, but she did not move again that night. Men and women crowded in panic on the deck, but the steadiness of the ship gave them confidence in the officers' assurance that there was no danger.

Meanwhile everything known to the craft of seamanship was being done below decks. Bulkheads were closed and the extent of the damage was studied. The sharp points of Maentare Rock had pierced the bottom in several places forward of the main mast.

The ship filled to the water line to a point about 200 feet from the bow. Here a bulkhead crossed the ship and held back the water from the engines and the after part of the vessel. Anchors were carried out astern and the steam windlasses pulled on them while the screws revolved at highest speed.

The vessel shivered but did not move an inch. At the moment the Suevic struck a man had heaved the lead line, and as he turned to shout his warning the blow of the ship's bottom on the ledge hurled him and every one else flat.

Nothing could be done till morning but to exchange mournful wails with the steam fog-horn at the light which could now be clearly heard. In the morning the fog was gone and the southwester had died down. The passengers were sent ashore with their hand baggage in the ship's boats.

The news had been reported by telephone to the offices of the company, and a fleet of tugs were steaming furiously to the scene from Liverpool bearing divers and engineers. At a more leisurely pace floating derricks and lighters followed. When the small navy arrived a concerted pull by all the boats was made to drag the vessel off.

The points of rock which had impaled the Suevic's bottom refused to yield an inch. Such cargo and heavy objects as could be fished out of the water in the forward hold were moved aft to tilt the bow up, and at the next convenient high tide the tugs took hold again. The Suevic tugged with her windlasses and churned foam with her propellers. This time there was no perceptible motion, but the plates forward of the mainmast started and a crack yawned in her side. Strain and tug as they would no more results could be obtained.

Then part of the fleet retired, the captain returned to Liverpool for consultation with the officers of the company, and with the insurance agents. Engineers shook their heads, and for many days there seemed to be no plan of rescue. The waves broke over the wreck and it was expected that the first storm would pound it to pieces.

At last a scheme was agreed upon and lighters with timber, several thousand empty sacks and a ton of dynamite appeared on the scene. The bulkhead forward of the mainmast was reinforced with heavy timbers and braced, strengthened and made water tight.

Then the stokers commenced getting up steam while a small army of workers plied bags of sand in front of the bulkhead. Others removed the baggage and freight until only about 2,000 tons were left to balance the ship. Where the crack had appeared, the ship was girdled with dynamite cartridges. Below the water the bottom was covered by divers who fastened the explosive in watertight coverings connected with electric wires. The decks were lined from side to side with dynamite, and it was placed about the supports.

So great was the quantity to be exploded that it was not safe to leave any one aboard. When the time came for the cartridges to be fired every man deserted the Suevic and a wire cable was carried to a wrecking boat some distance astern where there was an electric detonating apparatus.

The current was sent over the wire and a great fan-shaped flame spurted high as the masthead from the wreck, and a roar that deafened everyone followed the flash. A great wave spread out in all directions, followed by cheers from all the boats.

The Suevic's bow had been successfully amputated from her stern, which was now free and slowly drifting away until she should bring up on the anchors that were out for that purpose. The amputation had been performed, but would the patient survive the operation? To find this out the tugs closed in on the drifting stern and the Suevic's crew clambered aboard. Stokers went leaping down to the bowels of the ship to heap coal on the banked fires while the engine room force eagerly examined the engines to see if the concussion had injured them.

The chief engineer, hurrying to the bridge to report that his engines were to be relied upon, met the jubilant inspectors of the bulkhead, who announced that the dynamite had confined its damage to the sandbags and the bulkhead was as tight as a drum. There was little water in the hold, and steam rapidly rising in the boilers.

The anchors were taken out of their resting places in the sand by tugs, returned to the ship and hoisted aboard.

Several tugs made fast to the liner's stern and with much cheering and whistling about two-thirds of the White Star liner started on her journey stern foremost to the hospital that was being made ready in Southampton.

Already preparations had been made at Belfast to build a new bow for the liner should the sea miracle come to pass and the salved two-thirds be returned in safety to Southampton. But so dubious did the unheard-of feat seem that the company would not close the contract until the good word was flashed to them that the Suevic was on her way.

At Southampton the shipping tooted wildly in congratulation of the sick ship's safe arrival. The drydock yawned hospitably and in she went, stern first, for a period of convalescence which has lasted almost to the present day. While the repairers were removing a buckled propeller shaft, taking out the partition and smoothing off the results of the dynamite's force a strange thing was being hurried to completion at Belfast. It was a weird bob-tailed wedge-shaped mass of steel plates.

From its deck projected one lone mast and where its stern should have been was an ugly steel bulkhead on which was lettered "Suevic, Liverpool."

A few weeks ago the bow was launched just as if it were a real ship, only the plunge was taken bow first—perhaps because there was no stern. The freak bobbed crazily on the water, where it was seized by a couple of tugs and towed away to Southampton. Heavy winds were encountered on the way, which made the bow reel wildly and almost capsized it. There were several hours when things looked bad for the bow. The wind and waves were so strong that the tug was making no headway, and had the wind increased it would have been necessary to have cut the hawser and allowed the helpless bow to drift to her fate.

As it was the hawser chewed and ground on the stern of the tug until its leather lashings were worn through and the manila hawser itself began to chafe.

Again Southampton saluted and cheered when the new bow arrived and once more the dry dock yawned and took in the missing part.

All that remained was to move the bow and stern together and to join them. Now this has been finished, the last rivet has been spread and an even coat of paint conceals the scar which should mark the greatest piece of successful amputation and grafting ever achieved.

The Suevic now floats as seaworthy and handsome as ever. The insurance companies have paid the loss on the bow, which still rests hopelessly impaled on Maentare, and all concerned rejoice that the Suevic had "found herself."

The Countess of Yarmouth NEXT?

"Harry Is My Brother,"

—Cried the Countess With Flashing Eyes.

"The More Disgrace to You!"

—Chorused Yarmouth and All the Family.

Alice Thaw Said to Be Unhappy With Her Noble Husband and Society Hears She Will Follow the Example of "Our Duchess," Consuelo Vanderbilt.

SOCIETY hears that the Earl and Countess of Yarmouth will furnish the next case of a disastrous international marriage.

It is not surprising that this union should turn out unhappily, for Yarmouth was perhaps the most persistent fortune-hunting foreign nobleman that ever came to these shores. He was in debt, incompetent, effeminate and impecunious. Even among his own class, which is very lenient to weaknesses of character among its members, he was looked upon as an unpromising person. By turns female impersonator, negro minstrel, fourth-rate actor, wine agent, he proved his inability to make a success at the least dignified of occupations. He even wrote a series of articles on "How to Be a Lady."

There remained no way, apparently, of saving himself from some form of painfully hard work but a marriage with an heiress. When he was reduced to the very last extremity he had the amazing and undeserved good fortune to win a young, charming, pretty and unsophisticated American girl with an immense fortune—Miss Alice Thaw, of Pittsburg. It was one of the many tragedies that have arisen from the mistaken social training of American girls.

Anybody familiar with the history of international marriages would have been sure that a match beginning as this one did would turn out unhappily. Nevertheless the Earl and Countess of Yarmouth have lived together in England for some five years without public disagreement, a state of affairs due, as all observers admit, to the remarkably sweet and self-sacrificing nature of the bride.

Now at last the inevitable rupture seems to have occurred. The news of it has reached Pittsburg in the form of a request from a firm of English attorneys for copies of all papers relating to the marriage. This is interpreted as meaning that the Countess is taking steps to obtain a legal separation from her husband.

The culminating grievance of the Countess is believed to have been the unfeeling behavior of her husband and his family during the terrible ordeal to which she was subjected through the shooting of Stanford White by her brother, Harry Thaw, and the subsequent events arising from it.

Lord Yarmouth's family missed no opportunity to make cruel and mean remarks about her misfortune. His father and mother, it should be explained, are the Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford, while his brothers and sisters bear the family name of Seymour. His own title is one which he bears "by courtesy" as the eldest son. All the family have lived in luxury upon the Thaw millions brought within their grasp by Yarmouth's marriage. They have been enabled to occupy their ancestral mansion, Ragley Hall, Worcestershire, which which previous to the marriage they were forced to let. Apparently they feel nothing but resentment and ill will in return for all the benefits and luxuries conferred upon them by the Countess. Their conduct is a common though unpleasant characteristic of human nature.

The Seymours were shocked beyond expression when they heard of the Thaw tragedy, although their own family boasts the most remarkable collection of murderers and scoundrels in English history, ranging from the Lord Protector Seymour, who was accused of poisoning the boy King Edward VI., down to the Marquis of Steyne, the villain of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair."

The old Marchioness, who is a peculiarly sour-faced and angular matron, was especially cruel in her remarks to her pretty and kind-hearted daughter-in-law. When the London newspapers arrived with long accounts of the tragedy in the Madison Square Garden, heralded by unusually large headlines, the Marchioness immediately began to read them to the Countess.

"This is terrible," exclaimed the Marchioness. "Harry Thaw has brought disgrace upon the house of Seymour. We are the most historic house in the Kingdom and now we are associated with a notorious American murder case. I knew that trouble would come from this miserable American alliance."

"Harry is my brother," cried the Countess with flashing eyes.

"The more disgrace to you!" chorused Yarmouth and all his family.

"Wretched girl! Think what you have done!"

"Why do you talk like that?" cried the Countess, bursting into tears. "You don't know anything about it. I am sure my brother Harry is not a murderer."

"Oh! this is too dreadful," shrieked the noble virago. "You have the audacity to defend the wretch! The only thing for you to do is to go and hide yourself from society and the world until this dreadful affair is to some extent forgotten. That is the only way you can mitigate the disgrace your brother has brought upon the house of Seymour."

The Countess, who had endured endless slights and impositions inflicted upon herself, was moved to resentment by the cruel references to her brother Harry, whom she loved better than any member of her family. To her the New York tragedy meant simply that he was in trouble and that he needed her help more than ever.

As a result of these scenes there was a temporary separation between the Earl and Countess. She secluded herself in her English country home, Park Hall, Salford, while he went to London. She was absolutely prostrated with grief and anxiety.

Then suddenly she made up her mind to go to America and comfort her brother Harry in the Tombs. It is believed that her intention was not known to her husband and the rest of his family until she was on the point of starting. This action aroused their indignation more than anything that had yet occurred.

"Why," they cried, "you are doing the very thing to call attention to our association with this horrible affair."

"Don't interfere with me," said the little Countess. "My duty to my poor brother is my own business."

It is obvious that if the Earl of Yarmouth had been really devoted to his wife he would have come with her to New York and remained constantly at her side during her terrible ordeal, but he stayed behind in comfort in England. As everybody knows, she came to New York, visited her brother almost daily in the Tombs, stayed by his side every day during his trial, extended a friendly hand to Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and in many ways helped her brother and created sympathy for him.

As the trial went on for an extraordinary length of time and aroused more interest and excitement than any similar American case has ever done in England the indignation of the noble family of Seymour grew proportionately. When the Countess finally returned to England they made life miserable for her, and it is no wonder that their conduct has proved the climax to poor Alice Thaw's sufferings.

It is only necessary to refer to the early record of Yarmouth and to the peculiar circumstances attending his marriage to discover overwhelming reasons why this union should end in failure. The Earl of Yarmouth began life as a comparative pauper, considering his station. His family has lost the vast estates which once went with the Hertford title by a peculiar combination of circumstances. The third Marquis of Hertford, the original of Thackeray's Lord Steyne, left several sons, including an illegitimate one, Sir Richard Wallace. The oldest son then inherited the title and property, but on his death bequeathed the property to his brother, Sir Richard Wallace, who in turn bequeathed it to the public. The title, without the estates, passed to the grandfather of Yarmouth, who was a cousin of "Steyne."

The Marchioness of Hertford, the Mother-in-Law.

Instead of going to honest work to make up for his lack of fortune Yarmouth plunged into wild and extravagant courses. While in Australia he appeared on the stage in the guise of a ballet dancer. He made up with golden curls that fell over his bare shoulders, with rouged cheeks and carmined lips, and with skirts of gauze. He was featured in the programme as "Mademoiselle Rose, of the San Carlos Theatre, Naples."

So great was the popular success achieved by the Earl that he was induced to appear in similar feminine roles in other theatres of Australia and New Zealand.

His behavior aroused so much notoriety that it became convenient for him to seek a new place of abode. He drifted over to America, where after various feeble efforts to make a living he found that his only hope lay in capturing a misguided American heiress. One out of Heaven knows how many attempts of this character was aimed at Miss E. Burd Thaw, aunt of Miss Alice Thaw. When the elder Miss Thaw had rejected him he turned to the niece and won her. It is believed that Harry Thaw, who had been amused in his bibulous moments by the Earl, was partly responsible for the match.

The wedding was an astounding chapter of sordid accidents. On the very morning of the wedding day the Earl found two detectives waiting for him at his hotel with a writ for an English debt of $1,586.

When one of the officers asked Benjamin Thaw, brother of the bride, if he wished to pay the bill to relieve the Earl of embarrassment, he said:

"No, you can take him to the dog pound if you like. You are an officer of the law; do your duty."

The wedding was to have taken place at 4 o'clock, but at 6 o'clock everybody was still waiting, because the Earl and his English attorney insisted all the papers connected with the marriage settlements should be signed before the ceremony proceeded. By these documents one-fifth of the bride's estate was settled on the Earl of Yarmouth. It is understood that he received $100,000 in cash before the wedding, and this understanding was confirmed by the fact that he was seen carrying large wads of bills, an occurrence never before recorded.

Harry Thaw, who had engineered the wedding and promised to give the bride away, was disgusted by the haggling over money matters and withdrew at the last moment. The duty of giving the bride away was delegated to a younger brother, Josiah Copley Thaw. The older brothers of the bride, Benjamin and Edward Thaw, stayed away from the wedding because they disapproved of it. Benjamin addressed his sister in very solemn language and warned her of the danger she was incurring.

Considerable amusement was created among those familiar with English customs when it was found that the family of the bridegroom had clubbed together to present the bride with a diamond and emerald tiara, which was an heirloom in the family. Under the English law this heirloom must eventually have belonged to Alice Thaw as Marchioness of Hertford. The wily donors were the father and mother of the bridegroom, the Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford; his brother, Lord Edward Seymour, and his sister, Lady Jane Seymour.

When the wedding was finally performed, the Earl and his bride hastened to New York on their way to Europe, but he was compelled to dodge a horde of lawyers and men with writs and bills who were waiting for him. He sneaked on board the ship and his lawyer, Colonel Stephen H. Olin, of New York, stood on the deck with an enormous roll of bills, paying off the more pressing claims in order that the ill-starred honeymoon of the British nobleman and his bride might not be interrupted by duns.

Made All the Women Furious, But—

When the Ladies of St. Louis Read the Horrid Things Editor Greve Said of Them, They Looked in the Glass, Got Madder Than Ever and All Began to Primp Up.

"It is no wonder that St. Louis ladies are rushing to the mirror, metaphorically held up to them by Editor Greve, to see if they are really so ugly as he asserts them to be."

ST. LOUIS is in a rage.

Fair members of haughty families pedigreed clear back into French nobility of the Sixteenth century are aghast at the sublime insolence of the thing.

For an almost unknown young man of their own town, who owns a magazine and is editor of the same, has dared to declare in print that they are famed for ugliness and for bad taste in dress and manners.

What shall be done to a mere youth who has published such calumny? This is what he wrote; here's the very note—in Clifford Greve's magazine called "Humanity":

"Far and wide St. Louis is known as having the ugliest women in the universe. God seems to be against us when it comes to making a crop of beauties.

"St. Louis women can be compared only to cattle and 'sorry' bovines at that, for they are of the type found out in the short-grass country in a very dry season, which look most like a bundle of barbed wire with a tawny hide stretched over it so tightly that the points stick out.

"Oh! St. Louis, our patron saint, deliver us from this overabundance of stringy, lean 'canners.'

"But even a very homely female can get herself up. Lo! here they dress less and in the worst taste exhibited anywhere on the American continent.

"But fashion has gotten around to us and for a time St. Louis will be just it with the best collection of the hipless in the world."

If Editor Greve and his little magazine had been alone concerned in this insult, say these outraged St. Louis ladies, he might have written himself blue in the face, and small damage done—"for who reads his old magazine, anyway"

But that fatal page fell under the eye of a big St. Louis newspaper editor who, with fiendish glee—the wretch!—reprinted it with big headlines. There untold thousands read the calumny. Other papers copied it, thus scattering the slander broadcast before millions.

Western correspondents telegraphed it to Eastern papers. American representatives of European papers cabled it to London, to Paris, to Berlin, to Vienna and to St. Petersburg, without shame and untouched by remorse, so that the whole world might hear, and believe, that St. Louis women are the "ugliest in the universe."

Now see what happens. The slanderous little editor is interviewed by the fiendish [illegible] editors and thus he "rubs it in" far and wide:

"Many gentlemen from other cities have told me that the ladies of St. Louis were less attractive than any they had ever seen.

"Two gentlemen challenged me to walk through the West End with them on a Sunday afternoon and prove to them at St. Louis ladies are beautiful. I took them up and we took a stroll along King's highway. Really, I had to confess that I was beaten.

"Mind you, I don't say that I did not see some handsome ladies, but taken all together, they were the worst lot I have seen anywhere. I was so thoroughly convinced that the criticisms of my friends were true that I hurried to my office and wrote that editorial.

"Women don't dress well here. Men don't, either, for that matter. It is the worst city in the world in that respect.

"When St. Louis women have natural advantages of face and figure they don't know how to take advantage of them. That is especially true of the figure. A thin woman wears clothes which make her look thinner and a fat woman wears clothes which make her look fatter.

"Now, I don't say that there are not pretty women in St. Louis. In my Sunday afternoon walks through the West End I have seen ladies with faces which were positively angelic—so pure and good—such open, innocent faces, open in the same sense that a cow's face is open.

"Women of that type seem never to have come in touch with the world. They don't seem to be wise like the women of other cities.

"If you look for women of that sort you will find many in St. Louis, but they don't know anything about the game of being beautiful. They don't know how to dress and they don't seem to care at all for that subtle something called 'charm.'"

Last, and really worst of all, Editor Greve is actually in receipt of letters from St. Louis women admitting that he is right. Here is what one writes:

"You were speaking about the St. Louis women being homely. I, for one, think you are right about it. I was walking along Broadway (St. Louis, not New York) and I remarked to a lady friend of mine that I never saw so many and badly dressed women as there are in St. Louis.

"The fat ones think they are the only thing because they have a little more flesh than some of us skinny ones. They never stop to look at their great big feet and hands, and their skin looks like a nutmeg grater.

"I was in one of the department store waiting room's yesterday, and a young girl—she couldn't be over twenty—came in to do up her hair. After she had fixed her hair to suit her, she got out a big powder rag and smeared a lot of red paint on both sides of her face—clear to the roots of her hair.

"I though she would wipe some of it off. Not much! She put some white powder over it and stuck one of those squilly whiffles hats on the back of her head, and the only thing I could think of was a Kickapoo Indian—and she certainly had him skinned a mile.

"My home is in St. Louis. I was born here, and I think if some of the St. Louis women—not all—would spend more time in trying to look nice than in talking about their neighbors, they would gain more for their own credit and for the credit of their city."

After this last shot from one of their own sex, it is no wonder that St. Louis ladies are rushing to the mirror, metaphorically held up to them by Editor Greve, to see if they are really so ugly as he asserts them to be.

Furthermore, it is whispered that, secretly, in their own boudoirs, these St. Louis ladies are standing by the hour before their mirrors practising all the arts they have ever heard of to remedy defects so brutally described.

How are the poor things to be advised? But first they should be informed that in one important respect Editor Greve has made them the envy of most of the members of the most fashionable smart sets on earth. Just now, in Newport, in New York and Philadelphia, in London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna, the traditional feminine form divine is at a discount.

The happiest up-to-date woman of fashion is the one without any figure at all. She may have a pretty face, but otherwise she is a mere skeleton to hang clothes on. No bust, no waist, no hips—particularly no hips—that is the ideal toward which all are frantically striving.

O St. Louis women, "skinny," "boney," "angular," behold how you are blessed. In your place the fat-frightened dame of the cosmopolitan smart set would be in the seventh heaven of contentment. She could go serenely about hanging the smartest costumes on her shapeless frame with never a worry about artificial means of gaining the "hipless effect." Being hipless by nature, her mind would be at ease.

So, ye blessed fortune's favorites in St. Louis who grieve so mistakenly over lack of curves, just study how to make yourselves all the mode—irresistible as clothes racks. Reflect on these things that the fashionable women of New York, Newport, Philadelphia and Baltimore have to do every day of their lives:

On awakening in the morning reach for a hand glass to see whether that threatened double chin has at last arrived.

Resolve to eat nothing more fattening than lean boiled beef, washed down with hot water—and the smallest quantity of that.

Firmly determine to "cut out" everything you want to do, and to do everything you can think of that you don't want to do.

Walk four miles in fifty minutes; stew for an hour in a Turkish bath; suffer your masseuse to pinch and knead the last possible ounce of weight out of your body; go to your gymnasium, where, swathed in an India rubber garment, you practise bodily contortions which ought to make you eligible to the circus ring—all to overcome your arch enemy that grows stronger every year—fat.

When you have dined—though you have not eaten half the amount your stomach craves—don't think of sitting at your ease immediately. That means more fat. You must stand on your feet for at least a quarter of an hour first.

Even after all these labors and deprivations of a modern female Hercules, your apparently hipless state is a rank fraud. The hips are there just the same. It is your maker of stays and your dressmaker who must, with infinite pains and at great expense in your time and money, obliterate your waist-line and minimize your bust with pads and so forth, cunningly placed so as to strike a sort of general average of formlessness.

Which shows that St. Louis women already possess that coveted ground plan of hiplessness upon which to successfully construct the model woman of elegance and fashion. Two things only she has to do—in dress, live up to her hipless state of blessedness; in details, conform to her individual style.

As to hair, she positively must forget that "Marcel wave," that pompadour and every other set mechanical fashion, taking hints from them only in arranging an individual coiffure suited to the face. The same rule applies in the matter of hats.

On this page are reproduced photographs of well known types of fashionable women whose example should set these poor St. Louis ladies to thinking.

Observe the note of utter simplicity in the tout ensemble of Princess Marie Bonaparte; yet her trousseau for her coming wedding cost $250,000, and emphasizes the empire effects for the immediate season.

Half a glance will show that Mrs. Robert Goelet's hair is dressed in an individual style precisely suited to her aristocratic profile, including the uplift of chin and throat.

Miss Clara Barclay is an object lesson to those who wish to make of themselves a symphony in furs.

The photograph of Miss Gwendolyn Burden is a whole sermon on hats and how to wear them, while that of Mrs. Williams P. Burden is equally eloquent with respect to the possibilities of the long, slender effect of the Empire style in gowns.

With these few remarks—considering their natural, blessed state of hiplessness so mistakenly proclaimed as a deformity—it would seem that St. Louis ladies might be trusted to construct of themselves the very glass of fashion and elegance.

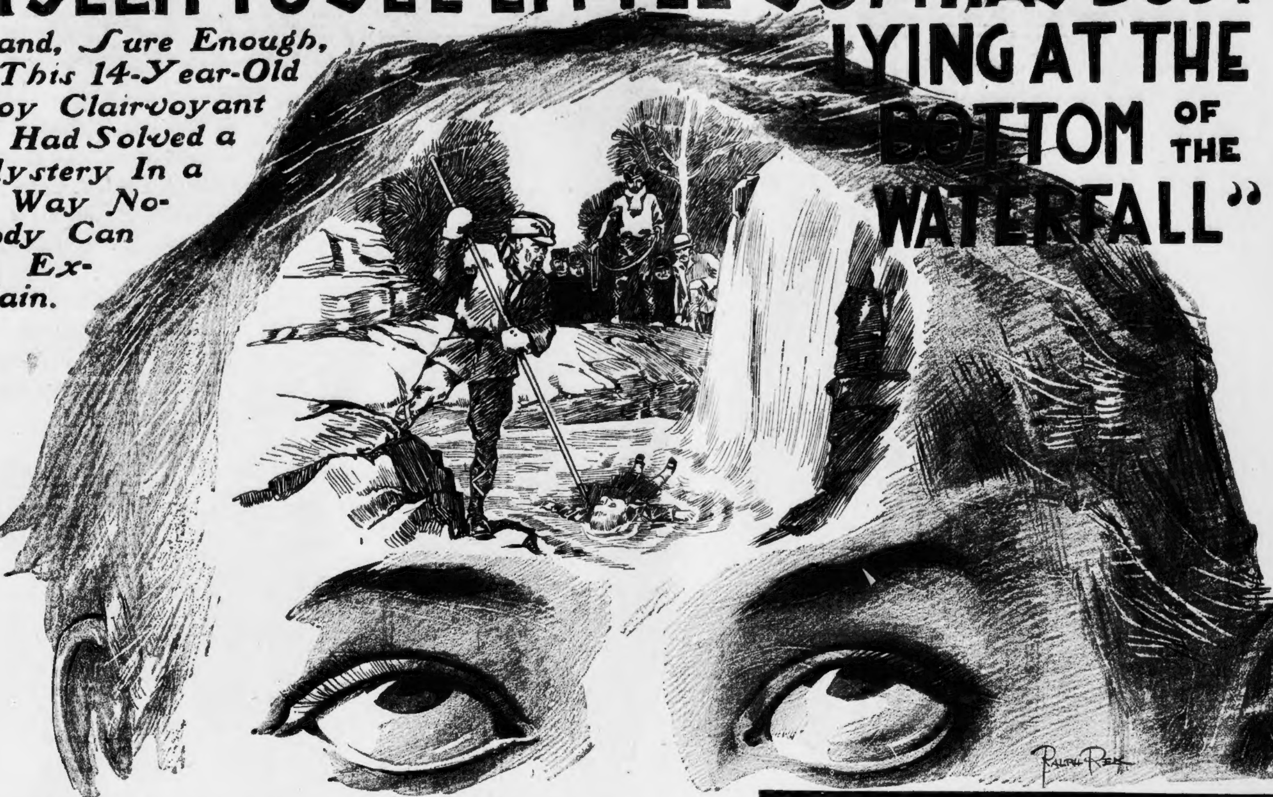
"I SEEM TO SEE LITTLE SOPHIA'S BODY LYING AT THE BOTTOM OF THE WATERFALL"

—and, Sure Enough, This 14-Year-Old Boy Clairvoyant Had Solved a Mystery In a Way Nobody Can Explain.



Startling Manifestations of a "Sixth Sense" by a Peasant Boy in Norway Who Has Located Missing Persons, Found Lost Articles and Unravelled Murder Mysteries.

A Party of Norwegian Soldiers Engaging in the Search for the Mountain Cavern Where the Boy Clairvoyant "Saw" Anna Jensen, the Stolen Girl, Hidden by Tramps.

London, Nov. 16.

THERE can be no further doubt about the marvellous clairvoyant powers of Johann Floettum, the fourteen-year-old farm boy whose "sixth sense" has enabled him to perform feats that have set the whole of Norway, his native country, talking.

He has located missing articles, explained mysterious murders, revealed the spot where the body of a missing child lay, and directed the police in many searches for criminals.

Sir Henry Seton-Karr, the noted traveller and hunter of big game, has lately returned from a visit at the home of this remarkable boy, where he tested his occult gift with results which enable Sir Henry to endorse all that has been claimed for it.

Sir Henry describes Johann Floettum as an apparently normal and healthy Norwegian farm lad of the peasant class, of good size for his age, which is barely fourteen. A closer inspection reveals, however, a pair of eyes which seem to have the habit of turning their glances inward—rather, a lifting of the pupils until they are nearly or quite veiled by the upper lids.

When engaged in ordinary conversation the lad's glance is frank and his eyes do not appear different from those of ordinary persons. It is when Johann exerts his strange power of "seeing" things which have happened, or are happening, elsewhere, that this transformation in his organs of vision occurs.

Sir Henry's visit to the lad's home was at a time last Spring when Johann's powers were about to be put to a most exacting test. Being owner of an elk forest not far from Sing-Sass, the boy's native place, Sir Henry had heard much of the gossip circulating about the neighborhood concerning Johann's feats of clairvoyance. And he knew the sad story of the little girl who was lost in the woods near Aalesund two years before, the mystery of whose fate was now expected to be solved by the "sixth sense" of Johann Floettum.

This widely announced test of the boy's powers was looked upon as a great occasion, especially by the peasant class. For many miles about Sing-Sass came peasants of both sexes, in their quaint national costume, full of confidence that the boy would tell what had become of little lost Sophia.

"Johann, my boy, you used to know little Sophia, didnt' you?" queried Sir Henry, "the little girl who has been missing two years?"

"Yes, sir, we used to go to the same school," said Johann.

"Try and tell us what has become of her; tell us where we can find little Sophia." Sir Henry urged gently.

Johann did not appear to go into the conventional trance. At first he seemed to be looking far, far away toward the mountains at Aalesund. Gradually his glance turned inward, the pupils of his eyes turned upward until they were concealed by the lids. Every now and then he passed his hand lightly across his brow. Presently his lips began to move. The audience became absolutely silent. At length the boy began speaking, hesitatingly, in low, dreamy tones:

"I—seem—to—see. (A pause while he draws his hand across his eyes.) Yes, I see a 'soeter' (mountain farm). I see—a broken—fence and a ploughed—yes, a ploughed field. I see—a little—house. It is—near the—field. I look into the—house. I—seem—to—see a woman—no—no, not a woman. I see—yes, I see—the eldest of the—farmer's three daughters."

The peasants from Aalesund nudge each other and exchange triumphant glances. To them the boy's description seems photographic. They hold up their fingers warningly as the boy's lips move again.

"I—see the farmer—going to his work—yes, his work—in—the field. I see the—three—daughters—doing the work of the house. I—seem to hear the eldest—yes, she is telling 'Sophia': 'Sophia—sister—you—shall take—your basket—and go up the hillside—for—berries.' I—see—that Sophia is—glad. I—see her go out singing—swinging her basket. She—goes through the fence—where—it—is broken. She picks—some—berries. Farther—from the—house she—finds more—berries. I—see—Sophia picking berries—far—from her—home in the edge—of the—forest. Now—I see that Sophia—yes, she is sad—she weeps. She can—not see the house. She is—lost. I—see—her going in the—wrong direction—where the—river goes foaming—to—the falls."

Johann seems agitated. The peasants are awe-struck, hardly daring to breathe. Johann continues more rapidly, and with a sad countenance:

"I see poor, lost—little—Sophia crying and stumbling along by the river. I—see her—foot tripped—by a vine—and she falls—into—the river. I hear her scream, and—I—see—her—carried swiftly over the falls. Now—something seems to—hide her from—me."

The peasants are powerfully stirred in their emotions. They lean forward eagerly as Johann brushes his forehead absently. Now his lips move again, and he says, with absolute certainty in his voice:

At this point Johann comes out of his trance-like state. It was not really a trance, for he remembers all the details of what he has seen.

"Ja, ja, ja," says a peasant from Aalesund. "I know that waterfall. Come, neighbors, we will go and find the body of little Sophia."

Sir Henry Seton-Karr returned to his hunting lodge in his elk forest, where a few days later he learned from a messenger he had sent to Aalesund that the body of little Sophia, two years after her disappearance, had been found under the waterfall, exactly as described by Johann Floettum.

Thereupon Sir Henry invited the boy to his hunting lodge as a guest, desiring to make the most thorough personal tests of his clairvoyance. One extraordinary episode Sir Henry describes as follows:

"To come to my own experiences with Floettum, I may say that they came about through elk-hunting, and a certain amount of 'chaff' in regard to a big bull elk which I wounded four years ago in my forest, but could not trace, and whose head I much desired to find.

"There was snow on the ground at the time, but although I followed the trail of blood for a whole day I never found the beast, and I often wondered at its immense staying power. The rain which followed completely spoiled the trail for the dogs.

"I invited young Floettum to take coffee with me and discuss that big bull elk. He is an intelligent type of the Norwegian boy, about fourteen years of age. There is no affectation about him, and when he is asked a question he puts his elbows on the table, covers his eyes with his hands, and describes minutely what he 'sees.'

"I talk Norwegian, and I explained to him where I had started from. Then I drew a rough map for him, and asked him to describe the trail of the elk.

"This he did with his eyes closed. It was an amazingly circuitous trail, ending at a pool where, he said, the elk's head and leg bones now lie.

"I next asked him to draw a straight line from the spot where I shot the elk to the pool. This was the most amazing part of his performance.

"Without a moment's hesitation he drew a straight line from one spot to the other, with his eyes closed, marking off with his pencil intervals of a hundred yards. He informed me that the spot where the head lies is exactly 1,800 yards, as the crow flies, from the spot where I shot the animal.

"One of the 'intervals' was a trifle shorter than the others. When I asked him the reason for this he explained that he was taking into account a sharp dip in the ground at this spot. This particular dip I know well, and I was more impressed by this little detail in the boy's drawing than by anything else.

Anna Jensen, Who Was Stolen by Tramps and Hidden in a Cave Described by Johann in a Trance.

"Of course, I am having the spot explored, and in a few days I shall hear if the elk head is where the boy 'saw' it. I should certainly not be surprised if it were."

Strangely enough, a few days after Sir Henry made the foregoing statement, he received word from his game-keeper at the elk forest, that the head and leg bones had been found in exactly the spot described by Johann Floettum.

All accounts agree that Johann, a simple-minded, honest lad, had no idea of putting his rare gift to his own pecuniary advantage. He has seemed to regard as a joke several offers from dime museum and music hall managers. He seems quite satisfied with the gratitude of neighbors, and visitors from distant parts of Norway, when his "sixth sense" has solved difficulties for them.

A year ago many farmers of his neighborhood complained of mysterious losses of sheep. They went to Johann about it. He went into his trance-like state and "saw" the missing sheep shot and eaten by "riper" (red grouse) hunters, a class of sportsman who live on what they can capture.

This verdict, strengthened by the prestige of the boy's fame, was circulated everywhere, with the result that no more

One day in the Winter a peasant came to Johann lamenting the loss of his old silver watch, an heirloom in his family. Young Floettum "saw" it buried in a snowdrift where the peasant had dropped it. He gave an accurate description of the spot, and there the delighted old man found his property.

A resident of a neighboring town, a man not well balanced mentally, disappeared and was searched for in vain. Johann was appealed to. He described a deep pool in a river running by the town, and there, at the bottom of the pool, the body of the demented man was found.

At the present time most of the inhabitants of Norway are exercised over the success or failure to locate Anna Jensen, a young girl stolen from Christiana and carried off by tramps. The boy declared that he "saw" the birl being carried by tramps to the sea coast, thence into the mountains, and there concealed in a certain cave cave.

"The girl is alive," he said. "But she has suffered terribly and is much emaciated."

He described the mountains and their location with so much detail that there was no difficulty in identifying them.

More than two hundred peasants engaged in the search for the cave. In Christiana interest in Anna Jensen's fate was so intense that a large party of soldiers, equipped for mountain travel, was sent out to assist in the popular undertaking.

The cave was finally found, just as it had ben described by Johann Floettum, but owing to its size and many winding branches, could not then be thoroughly explored.

Sir Henry said that when he left Norway preparations were complete for a thorough search of every part of the cavern, and there was a general expectation that it would prove successful—so firm is the faith of his countrymen in the occult powers of Johann Floettum.

Naturally, public confidence in Johann's clairvoyant powers has come to be shared by public officials in the part of Norway where the boy lives. Upon several occasions the police have sought his aid in solving criminal mysteries—usually with complete success.

Last Spring the police were at their wits' end to account for a series of robberies committed in a fine country mansion not far from Sir Henry Seton-Karr's hunting lodge. Several tramps were arrested, but the robberies continued. Finally Johann was appealed to. He went into his trance-like state and "saw" the confidential man servant of the owner of the house stealing money and plate, which he hid until able to dispose of it in Christiana. Confronted with Johann's statement, the man confessed.

Johann has many visitors of scientific pretensions, interested in trying to explain his strange power. They have come to the little town of Sing-Sass from Christiana, from Stockholm, and even from the German universities.

The theory finally arrived at, after many tests, like those here described, is not very satisfactory, being simply that Johann Floettum is a "sensitive," and a natural clairvoyant—something which even science has latterly come to admit the existence of without being able to account for in set scientific terms.

"The Insurance Policies insuring a woman against being an old maid will be classed as "preferred risks," "hazardous," etc., according to where she lives and taking into consideration her health, age and attractiveness. Physical Culture Dancing Pose, Illustrating the Vigorous Exercise of Muscles from Tips of Fingers Even to the Toes.

Husband Insurance Polic s for Unmarried Women.

ONE woman out of every three women in the United States fails to get a husband. In Massachusetts nearly half the women lack husbands; in some of the Western States marriageable women are married as fast as they arrive. These are some of the facts discovered by agents of a big American life insurance company, who have been digging over the statistics of the United States Census Bureau in Washington with a view to issuing insurance policies to insure women against becoming old maids. It is believed that a husband insurance policy can be devised for a reasonable premium which will be as attractive to young unmarried women as a life insurance policy is to young men with families.

Of course the policy will not undertake to provide a husband any more than life insurance pretends to keep the policy holder alive. But the comforts of money will ease the disappointment of the spinster in her old age just as it does the widow whose husband was insured, and the heartbroken girl to whom the courts have awarded damages for breach of promise.

Study of the census and other information on the subject collected by the company reveal among other remarkable things that a woman's chances of marriage are largely a question of geography. A railroad ticket is the only thing that stands between the average girl on the Atlantic Coast and matrimony.

The insurance policies insuring a woman against being an old maid will be classed as "preferred risks," "hazardous," etc., according to where she lives and taking into consideration her health, age and attractiveness. Every woman applying for husband insurance will be examined by inspectors, who will make a rating as to her complexion, hair, eyes, teeth, plumpness, prospective probabilities of motherhood, amiability and even the attractiveness of her smile. The rating of these points will determine the class of "risk" of each applicant and will affect the premium.

The problem is no more complex than that of life insurance. A pretty girl in good health, with good nature and reputation, would have little difficulty in getting a policy in her youth, nor would her premium be high even if she lived in Massachusetts, where the chances are almost even against the average girl finding a mate.

A less healthy and attractive girl in the same state or in Virginia, where marriage is equally scarce, would have to pay more, according to the degree of difference in these matters, until finally the case would be reached which the company would refuse to take at any premium.

They might exclude a girl because her health is so bad as to make marriage unlikely or because she is cross-eyed or cross-tempered, or because they don't approve of her habits. Temperament and habits would be secretly learned just as the companies now find out whether a person dissipates or not and rate him accordingly.

A cross-eyed, cross-tempered, anaemic young lady who would be refused in Boston might obtain a policy by moving permanently to Wyoming or Idaho, where practically all girls that are not insane, crippled or hopeless invalids, become married.

The age at which a maiden's chances of marriage are dead and therefore the amount of the policy becomes payable will be placed at about forty years in general. By paying a higher premium it may be made earlier. To prevent spinsters from putting off marriage until the policy is paid and to forestall the horde of adventurers who would descend upon every insured woman as soon as her fortieth year was reached, some precautions would be necessary. Perhaps the company would pay in increasing instalments until her fiftieth year, or hold it in trust for her, paying only interest until that time. If she should marry before fifty she would forfeit whatever was still unpaid.

The map on this page shows at a glance what the average girl's chances of marriage in the various parts of our country are, according to Uncle Sam's figures at Washington. The figures are per thousand. For instance, in Florida, 710 women out of every 1,000 get married, or in other words, the average girl stands seven chances out of ten of changing her name.

Averaging all the States and Territories only two women out of three are married.

As shown by the records of the Federal Census, the per cent of women married is much greater in some parts of the country than in other parts. Certain regions average high in spinsters, and are therefore risky from the standpoint of matrimonial insurance.

It may be said that Massachusetts and Virginia are most unfavorable for expectation of husbands, the married women in each of these two States numbering only 584 out of every 1,000 female persons of marriageable age. Rhode Island comes next in point of undesirableness from the spinster's viewpoint, only 590 in every 1,000 women being provided with husbands. Arkansas in this respect is fourth from the bottom of the list, having only 595 women married out of every 1,000.

If, on the other hand, a maiden, no matter what her age, wishes to augment her prospect of matrimony as much as possible, she should go to Wyoming, where in every 1,000 women of marriageable age 837 have already secured mates. The great demand for wives up there may have something to do with the fact that the gentler sex in that State rules in politics, as well as in the home, voting even for Congressmen. In the Indian Territory, however, the percentage of married women is nearly as high, 835 in the thousand, and next door, so to speak, in Oklahoma, it is 831. Idaho is the only other State in the same class, its record being 830.

It appears, then, that in Wyoming, Idaho, Oklahoma, and the Indian Territory more than four women out of every five obtain husbands. No other State or Territory of the Union comes up to this mark. Looking over the official Government figures one finds that in Washington State 790 women out of every 1,000 are married. In Texas the number is 783, in Montana 769, in Nebraska 771, in South Dakota 780, in North Dakota 758, in Kansas 762, in Colorado 760, in Arizona 765, in Oregon 748, and in Nevada 723.

Very striking, as the eye moves eastward over the map, is the way in which the percentage of women who accomplish matrimony runs down. In the middle West it is much less than in the far West, and in the East, again, it is yet a good deal lower. Ohio is the only State in the middle West which shows up to advantage, with 748 women married in every 1,000. Wisconsin comes next, with 729, then Missouri with 714, followed by Indiana with 712, Minnesota with 712, Illinois with 710, Iowa 708, and Michigan with 705.

As soon as the States along the ea seaboard are reached, the number of women w ceed in getting husbands, relatively to the en umber of female persons, drops alarmingly. Of w England States Vermont seems to be the vorable locality as a place of residence for spi 700 out of every 1,000 women being married. comes next, with 659, and Connecticut and Hampshire follow with 625 and 618 respecti

Pennsylvania has 677 women marri f every 1,000. New Jersey makes about the howing, with 676. Little Delaware's record ufficient-ing fact in that State the average girl h chances out of three of becoming a wife. T t State of New York, alas, drops considerab w this mark, to 624.

In the next bunch of States to the s entucky shows up most creditably, with 718 married out of every thousand. West Virginia co t with 698. Maryland drops to 620. North a has 649, Tennessee 649, South Carolina 7 ssippi 708, Alabama 660, Louisiana 668, Geo 50, and Florida 710.

In the above list California was pur mitted, in order that special attention might b to the fact that it falls away below the othe Western States in respect to the average of es. Al- though in that State there are just 120,000 more males than females of twenty ed up- ward, which would seem to suggest ed for wives greater than the supply, onl out of every 1,000 women are married. In at the Golden State falls down to a level w e effete East.

Looking over the figures already give is manifest that the women marry oftenest in the States where their sex is scarcest. This, indeed, is what might naturally be expected. It follows, then, that the thing for a girl to do, if she wishes to reduce her prospect of matrimony as nearly as possible to a certainty, is to go to Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Washington, or, best of all to Wyoming, where she is reasonably sure to secure not only a mate, but a vote also.

In conclusion it may be said that Chicago is the city which affords by all odds the best matrimonial chances—as shown by the fact that in that town 700 out of every 1,000 women are married. No other great city in this country comes any where near this mark. St. Louis is next with 610 in the thousand, and San Francisco next with 590. New York follows with 580, and then Baltimore with 580, Cincinnati with 565, Philadelphia with 555, and Boston last, with 520 women married in every 1,000 females of marriageable age.

An important point to be noticed in this connection is that, if Chicago be barred, the cities are not as good markets for wives as the lesser towns and rural districts. Evidently men are not so dependent upon matrimony in the great centers of population. If such be in truth the case, the less thickly settled regions have advantages from the point of view of conjugal insurance, and the average maiden dwelling in a city, especially in the East, should realize that her chance of catching a husband is perceptibly less than that of her country cousin.

The moral effect of such insurance must be considered. It is universally recognized that men are attracted to a girl by the fact that others admire her and for the same reason take for granted that the "wall flower" is not worth serious attention, just because she is a "wall flower."

A life insurance policy at once gives the holder a health rating, because if he were sickly his application would be refused. So marriage insurance would give a girl a similar standing, for the company's opinion would be on record that they considered her so attractive that it was worth while taking chances on her reaching old age unmarried.

To what extent it might be worth while for the company to encourage marriage is a matter of speculation. Without doubt the concern could and would do a great deal in the way of putting lonesome and eligible bachelors on the track to the maidens who were beginning to worry.

Perhaps it would go to the extent of offering bachelors a premium in the form of a cash dowry or of free excursions of the company's most unlikely "risks" to the bachelor-swarming areas of the West. It might even be stipulated in the policy that the insured must submit to an introduction from a stated number of eligibles whom the company may see fit to send.

To the N th Pole by Bear-Power.

EIGHT little polar bear cubs are bei t through the most remarkable course of ing ever given wild animals in Hagen Winter quarters, near Hamburg, Germany. M genbeck, the well-known animal trainer, is per ly supervising this mysterious training, and as been learned that these young bears when grow up are to aid in an expedition to the Nor . Which one of the great polar explorers ha d these cubs is not definitely known, but it ved that Captain Roald Amundsen, the man navigated the Northwest passage, has ordered

The animals are now about three fe . fat and good natured. In six years or less thes will be nine feet long and will weigh nearly a apiece.

While the cubs are growing up, Hagen is teaching them to eat at regular times, to it to the presence of men, and even to a cert mount of mauling by strangers. Recently the c ave been compelled to drag around heavy piece wood by means of a sort of harness, while t iner attempted to steer them in various m . Sometimes he walked beside them and indic wishes by clubbing them on one side or the of their soft, fluffy heads; at other times ude sort of bit was experimented upon, with v eagre results.

Hagenbeck believes that when the cl have reached their full growth they will be , intelligent creatures, obedient to his comman d willing to draw sledges over the Arctic ice, in of biting and growling, as one would naturally ct.

Captain Amundsen, or whoever th lorer is, will use the best six out of the eight w hey have grown to their full size. The polar bea biggest bear in the world, and is probably str even than the famous grizzly. According t cul- culations, a full grown polar bear is ong as ten horses or one hundred sledge d

Six bears would be equivalent to si power, or to 600 dogs. No creature tter fitted to this environment than the gr ile ice bear, which looks so fluffy and mi in captivity. He is the only bear with on the soles of his feet. The hairs not ep his feet warm on Arctic nights when er- cury freezes, but prevent him from sl ice slopes where his claws might b His fur coat is proof against the cold that ever blew, and his endurance beyond belief.

Captain Sabine reported passing a p at sea forty miles from the nearest l was swimming powerfully and seemed tress. When Captain Sabine's ship d the bear changed his course and swa growling over his shoulder and leavin in the water like a launch.

When his bears are big and docile enough to suit him, Captain Amundsen will, it is said, put them aboard some Arctic ship built like the Fram (Nansen's famous ship), but he will have special quarters for the bears, which will be well fed and cared for on the voyage.

He will take the Behring Strait route and float with the current and ice across the polar basin until his ship gets caught in the ice or until he sees a favorable chance for a dash at the Pole. When the time for the dash comes he will lift his bears out of their cages with the ship's derrick and drop them overboard, where men in boats will see that they swim ashore at the right point. Then the six sledges will be harnessed up and off the procession will go for the North Pole. The sledges will be from five to ten times as heavy as those drawn by dogs, and they will have water-tight bottoms, enabling them to float on water.

Of course a polar bear eats as much as a lot of dogs, but he is much smarter at catching his own meals than the Esquimau dog. A bear can be chained to a breathing hole in the ice where seals from time to time poke their noses out, and if a seal appears the bear may be relied upon to make a meal of him.

If no seals are found, the polar bear is accustomed to plunge into the icy water and catch fish. But if all food supplies fail the wonderful endurance of the bear would probably take him on an empty stomach to the Pole. Once there they could kill a couple of the bears and feed them to the others, and return with four sledges.

One year no less than six bears floated over on icebergs from Greenland to Iceland and landed thin and hungry, but strong enough to put up a terrible fight with the natives of a little village where they paid their first call.

Mr. Hagenbeck goes so far as to predict that the great bears will be trained to sleep at night with their masters inside of a big canvas tent, where their great bodies and shaggy pelts will act as sleeping accomodations and heating apparatus for the party.

The animal trainer says that if he were in the party he would see nothing dangerous in cuddling up for the night with a half dozen hungry bears.

Peary, with his dog sledges, was stopped by a break in the ice. If Amundsen encounters water, his bears will enjoy swimming to the other side, and by making several trips the provisions could be ferried over in the water-tight sledges.

Bringing Ireland's 'Giants' Causeway' Here.

GREAT indignation has been aroused in England and Ireland by the announcement that the Giants' Causeway, one of the natural wonders of Ireland, has been bought by Americans and will be transported to the United States.

British journalists declare that this spoliation of a nation's natural beauties is the most flagrant of the many debasing uses which the Americans have made of their vast and ill-gotten riches.

The Giants' Causeway is a magnificent group of prismatic basaltic columns on the north coast of Ireland. These columns are to be shipped across the Atlantic to Philadelphia, where they will be erected in their original shape as an attraction to a suburban park and place of amusement similar to Coney Island.

The Causeway has already been purchased, and the first consignment of 200 tons has been packed in cases and placed on a White Star freighter for shipment to America. The price paid by the enterprising Americans is $3 per ton, at which rate the whole Causeway would cost a vast sum of money.

It is suggested, however, that the Americans, with their characteristic cunning, will purchase only the face of the Causeway. After this is removed the rest of the formation will not be worth looking at. The Causeway projects into the sea from the base of a stratified cliff four hundred feet in height and contains forty thousand columns.

The columns are polygonal in form and are grouped in different arrangements about a beautiful bay. One extremity of the formation is Bengore Head, the most northerly point in Ireland.

The Causeway has the appearance of a gigantic quay, which gave rise to the ancient legend that it was constructed by primeval giants, who walked about on it and moored their boats to it. The columns are cut in places so that stairways are formed more suitable for giants than for ordinary persons.

Another ancient Irish tradition has it that the Causeway formed part of a bridge from Ireland to Scotland built by Fin MacCumail and subsequently submerged in mid-channel, leaving only the ends visible, the one in Ireland and the other at Staffa, in Scotland.

The Causeway has long been the greatest attraction for tourists to this part of Ireland. It is one of many grand and remarkable basaltic formations in this region. The strange aspect of these formations is in many cases due to the extraordinary fury of the waves upon this coast. The Atlantic Ocean here dashes itself against the rocks with a fury which is probably not equally in any other part of the world. The action of the waves, maintained for countless thousands of years, has worn vast caves in the rocks, created natural bridges and produced fantastic forms which suggest castles and other human works built upon a gigantic scale. The wildness of the ocean, combined with the grand and fantastic forms of the rocks, produces a scenic panorama that is unequalled in Great Britain, and it is only natural that the removal of the chief ornament of this panorama to the United States should cause excitement. Indignation at this act is only tempered by admiration of the enterprise of the purchasers, who will transport 40,000 giant columns three thousand miles merely to amuse a crowd of American sightseers a few hours a day.

The Giant's Causeway leads to the Great Causeway. Immediately above it is the Giants' Organ, in which the basaltic columns are arranged like pipes of an organ. The Giants' Loom, the Giants' Pulpit, the Giants' Ball Alley, the Giants' Granary, the King and His Nobles, the Nursing Child, the Prince and His Flock, the Wishing Chair and the Devil's Eyeglass, all bear some fanciful resemblance to the places indicated by their names.

The Giants' Amphitheatre was pronounced by the famous traveller Kohl to be "the most beautiful ampitheatre in the world." It is an exact half circle, filled by level and graceful terraces of pillars, each surmounted by a broad projection of rock like an immense bench.

A POWERFUL POLAR

Dancing, the New Health Culture Exercise for Schools.

A MOVEMENT has started in England and in Germany to use dancing in the schools and gymnasiums instead of dumb-bells, Indian clubs and calisthenics. The dance has heretofore been regarded as an aesthetic diversion, but it has now been approved by scientific endorsement as admirably effective for physical culture. It is, indeed, a most vigorous form of exercise and, when intelligently taught, strengthens all the important muscles of the body.

One of the most expert teachers of physical culture dancing is Miss Vincent, principal of the Court School of Deportment in London. Her aim is the practical application of different sorts of dancing to the perfect development of the body in all its parts. In explaining the new system of exercise Miss Vincent says:

"The movements of graceful dances have the most encouraging results in the cultivation of the human figure. The gliding minuet will teach women how to walk. The Spanish movements will induce limberness. A rose, a tambourine, or castanets decked with brilliant ribbons will replace the unattractive dumb-bell.

"The present-day girl who indulges in rough sport and athletics should pay particular attention to beauty and figure culture," said Miss Vincent.

"Too much time is spent on face massage and the coiffure, to the neglect of the figure, and particularly of the feet.

"We notice many ladies well dressed and well shod, with no idea how to move their feet correctly. The statues of Phidias do not show the distorted joints, curled-over toes, and thickened ankles which we see to-day.

"All these faults can be cured by a careful manipulation of the body and feet, and no other exercise can insure the foundation of a good carriage better than the careful study of dancing. I contend that in the early stages of training it is more beneficial to coax and humor the muscles by the elegant movements of the old French minuets and Spanish dances, and to proceed gradually to more forcible exercises to gain strength."

Like Miss Duncan, Miss Vincent is a great believer in the aesthetic side of physical culture. Whatever conduces to strength and suppleness of the body also promotes beauty and grace. With the pupil—especially the pupil of the fair sex—the practice of dancing gains a double incentive.

To gain beauty and strength, and health, too, by the same means furnishes an argument for that means which easily overrides all other means. So Miss Vincent favors dancing lessons before a mirror. Every reflected movement of grace—meaning control of the muscles, poise—is an incentive to perseverance; to observe one's own awkward or constrained movements is to instantly correct them.

In this way, before a mirror, the stealthy movements of the shadow dance—calling for the most perfect control, and therefore strengthening of all the muscles of the body—are practised with splendid results.

The scarf dance exercise is used with fine effect to improve the contour of the arms and neck. Under this treatment thick wrists become slender, double chins disappear and unsightly hollows are filled up.

In the Court School many of the exercises are performed by pupils in couples. In the old saraband dance, while feet and bodies illustrate the rhythm of the music the hands of the two dancers are employed with roses, much as dumb-bells are used.

To promote strong and graceful movements from the waist there is a dance called "The Battle of Almond Blossoms." Each dancer holds in each hand a spray of these blossoms, which are manipulated during the dance much as the foil and dagger were used in the old Italian duello. The influence of flowers instead of steel is to replace swift and abrupt movements with graceful ones.

In fan dance exercises the pupils are expected to illustrate the true poetry of motion. This is really the finishing touch. When the fan dance is perfect the pupil is not only graceful in all her movements, but strong and supple in every muscle.

There is, too, a dance with cymbals which utilizes the peculiar and subtle effect of music and rhythm as an invigorator of muscular action. Many philosophers, ancient and modern, have recognized that the sense of rhythm, best gained through music that is rhythmical—like dance music—is wholesome, constructive, inspiring, both to body and to mind.

From rhythmical sounds dancing was begotten so long ago that archaeologists are unable to place the beginning of rhythm in sounds or of dancing. All savage races employ both. Both, in earlier times, were part of all religious observances, and the ancient Greeks made them virtually the basis of the most perfect system of human beauty-culture and physical development on lines of grace and strength that the world has known.

Albert de Rochas, officer of the Legion of Honor and administrator of the Polytechnic, of Paris, France, discovered, after many experiments, that musical sounds, particularly when produced rhythmically, had a direct action upon the muscles of listeners. Even if the listener was not dancing, the muscles would respond—and always with a sense of invigoration.

So Miss Vincent's system of physical culture employed at the Court School of Dancing in London seems, indeed, to be based on sound scientific principles. Besides, who would not rather dance to the rhythm of inspiring music than to strain lethargic muscles at tasks which in themselves offer no inspiration?

General recognition of the system certainly would do much for modern dancing as an art. The lady who confesses in the popular song, "I'd rather two-step than waltz, Bill," might then be willing, and able, to distinguish herself in the stately minuet.

Real Fluttering Butterflies Now Used in Millinery.

FROM London and Paris comes the news that real butterflies of all species, hues and sizes have been pressed into service as the latest ornamenting device of the milliners.

Upon their creations for the coming Winter these brilliant insects of the moth family will perch in the most life-like manner, their wings extended and fluttering as in life at the slightest motion of the wearer.

Only entomologists realize the immense number and variety of the brilliant-hued butterfly species included in the great moth family, how they range in size from that of the little "miller" moth that flutters about the lighted candle to gigantic specimens whose wings have a spread equal to that of a pigeon.

Throughout the whole range of these beautiful insects, whose species are scattered over all temperate and tropical lands, the London and Paris milliners have agents collecting the most brilliant specimens for the adornment of fashionable women in Europe and America.

The butterflies are preserved by a special method which retains their coloring in all the freshness of life, and are mounted—with or without jewels—on hats and gowns in such a manner that they appear to be living insects just alighted.

It is reported that this original fashion is eagerly welcomed by all women of taste in dress, since it is suited alike to the modest or the extravagant dress allowance.

A flight of red admirals, poised on a toque of lavender tulle, will cost their wearer only 25 cents. On the other hand, a floral hat of bronze pansies will be increased in price by $25, if four of the gorgeous gold Croesus butterflies, from the Little Molucca Islands, hover among the velvet blossoms.

The woman who can afford to pay any price for originality may choose the fragile bronze and cream oethosia leschenaulti, one of the rarest butterflies, or may order some exquisite foreign specimens, priced at $50 apiece.

The mother-of-pearl butterfly is beautiful on a hat of pale green chiffon, and another startling combination is a toque of black velvet roses trimmed with the large Java vandepolli in shades of black and saffron.

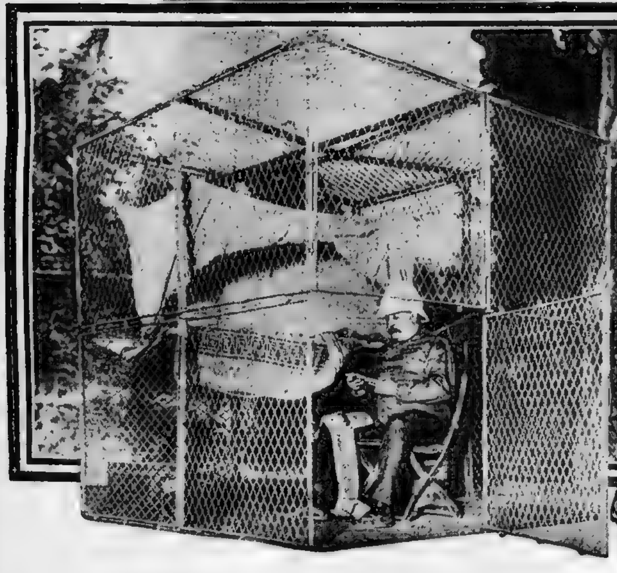
WHAT THE MONKEYS SAID to PROF. GARNER

New Experiments with the Big Apes in the Heart of the African Jungle to Learn the Simian Language.



Prof. R. L. Garner in His Steel Cage Among the Apes of the African Forest.

PROFESSOR RICHARD LYNCH GARNER, the most remarkable and mysterious scientist of American birth living to-day, is still in the heart of the African jungle studying the language of the monkeys and endeavoring to impart to them the rudiments of his own speech and wisdom.

Such devotion as Professor Garner's to a peculiar branch of nature study is unsurpassed in the annals of science. For many years he has given all his time, at the constant risk of his life and health, to conversation and communion with the monkeys.

The latest news concerning Professor Garner comes from Miss Ida Veronica Simonton, a very gifted and attractive, if eccentric, young woman, who has herself been smitten with a desire to know the monkeys better than it is possible to do in the United States. Miss Simonton, it may be recalled, was an acquaintance of the late Stanford White, and her name was frequently mentioned in connection with the Thaw case. She saw a good deal of Harry Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit in Europe, and it was said that she visited Evelyn and her mother in London on behalf of Stanford White, and helped them financially. Just when her testimony was most required at the late trial she dashed away into the heart of the French Congo to visit her friends, the monkeys.

Miss Simonton has just returned to Pittsburg, the home of romance. She has been a year in the African jungle and has returned with an immense quantity of curiosities and materials for a jungle play. She discussed her exciting experiences, while Jacques, her African parrot, sat on his perch and talked glibly in Spanish, Portuguese and African.

"I saw Professor Garner holding conversation with apes—mostly gorillas, and chimpanzees—and was amazed at the results," said Miss Simonton. "He seems to have no difficulty in understanding them. When Professor Garner comes out of the bush his revelations will be wonderful. People laugh at his studies now, but some day science will award him the laurels he deserves.

"While out there I gathered material for a jungle tragedy in three acts called 'Ndio.' It is practically the dramatization of a tale told me by an old chief. There is but one white person in the cast. I have arranged for its initial production in London. A number of natives from Africa have been engaged to take part in it, and in order to make it as realistic as possible it will be necessary to have these characters dressed as they are at home—and you know they don't wear much besides a grin and a smile.

"I put up a bamboo house in the jungle and lived there very comfortably. The chiefs came to visit me from all the country round. Many of them had never seen a white woman before. King Duke, of Calabar, in West Africa, came to see me with all his court. He brought his principal wife with him, although his main object in coming was to propose marriage. It is not remarkable for an African suitor to take along a wife when he goes courting.

"The king had fifty-nine other wives at home. He can't count his children. I was obliged to refuse his proposal, but made him happy by the gift of a pair of discarded trousers and an old bath robe. When he went away he gave me beautiful gifts of ivory."

Professor Garner, whom the fair explorer visited, is living in the French Congo country, about 123 miles south from Cape Lopez, on the west coast of Africa. Here there is an immense jungle, which is the favorite home of the gorilla.

While in the jungle Professor Garner lives, for safety and convenience, in a remarkable wire cage. Fort Gorilla, as he calls it, is six and one-half feet on each side. It is constructed of wire and is composed of twenty-four sections of equal dimensions. Each section is stiffened by a steel frame an inch wide by about three-eighths of an inch in thickness. Professor Garner lashes his hammock-like canvas bed to one side of "the fort," adjusts his mosquito netting above it and places his Winchester rifle within reach.

Then he feels sure that there is nothing in the jungle except possibly a "rogue" elephant, big enough to break his cage. And in any case he will have time to pump the beast full of lead before it can trample on him. In this cage he can observe the animals and converse freely with them while he can always protect himself against them.

When Professor Garner first began to study monkey speech he found that each species had its own distinct language, but that one species easily learned to converse with another.

"I learned more from my dear little chimpanzee Moses than from any one else," said the Professor. "By careful attention I was enabled to memorise ten sounds which my chimpanzee appeared to understand thoroughly and to which I would deign to reply. These ten words or sounds relate to the natural physical wants or sensations, and express gratification, fear, desire for food and so on. It is my belief that their vocabulary consists of about thirty words or sounds."

The speech of the apes was so similar in its nature to that of man that Professor Garner decided that it would be possible to teach human language to the apes. The latter task was the object of his present visit to the jungle. In fact he has gone there to establish a school of languages for monkeys.

"I began the task of teaching my little chimpanzee Moses to speak human speech," said the Professor, "and achieved very gratifying success. I selected the French word for fire, 'feu,' because it seemed suited to his vocal powers and because it could be so forcibly illustrated as to impress upon his mind the thing to which it alluded. I succeeded so well in this effort that I felt encouraged to go further. But his untimely death terminated my labors with him, and the opportunity for teaching others was not afforded me."

According to Miss Simonton Professor Garner has made greater progress in understanding the monkeys during his present expedition than in all his previous work.

The monkeys have come to know and trust him. They come every morning and afternoon to talk to him and attend school. The professor sits at the entrance of his cage to receive them. It is extremely interesting to see the mother chimpanzees bringing their children to learn wisdom from the white man.

The monkeys have [illegible] to bring the professor bananas, cocoanuts and other vegetables, while he [illegible] for them certain delicacies which they love.

"Good morning," says the professor when the monkeys first appear. "What have you brought this morning?"

"Bananas, cocoanuts, pineapples and other things good to eat," [illegible] the students in jungle language.

Then begins the lesson. Professor Garner has described the [illegible] branches of learning which he p[illegible] disposal of the semi-human inhabitants of the jungle.

"A few specimens [illegible] chimpanzees or gorillas will be [illegible]," said the Professor, "[illegible] a systematic course of training [illegible] after the manner of [illegible] kindergarten methods now in use [illegible] United States. Many of these experiments [illegible] been suggested by experts in the [illegible] of deaf mutes and feeble minded [illegible].

"One of the first [illegible] will be an attempt to teach an ape [illegible]. In doing this a small box and a few marbles will be used. It was by [illegible] means that I once ascertained whether or not a monkey could count. The ape is first supplied with one and later with two, three and more marbles as he shows himself capable of counting. The sounds of the numbers are impressed upon his mind until he learns to associate the sounds with the number.

"The pupil is also provided with pencil, paper or slate. He is taught to make single straight marks and to count them. He is then taught to make one mark with the plus sign, followed by one mark, and has the term 'one plus one' repeated to him until he understands. Then other numbers are substituted before and after plus and minus signs.

"[illegible] series of experiments is to determine his perception of form. I made a simple but practical experiment with Moses and found that he mastered the situation in a pretty short time. I took a board about a foot long and four inches wide. In one end of it was cut a square hole about two inches wide, and in the other end a round hole of about the same diameter. Two blocks of the same shape were made to fit in these holes. A small nail was driven into each block to serve as a handle. Moses was shown how to fit the square block into the square hole and the round block in the round hole. In a few lessons he learned to do this without difficulty. I always rewarded his efforts by giving him something good to eat. After having once learned that he could obtain food as a reward for this act he frequently went of his own accord and placed the board in position and fitted the blocks into their places.

"On one occasion when he had done this several times in succession and had failed to obtain anything for it he became impatient and resentful. He picked up the blocks, put the round block into the square hole and tried to put the square block into the round one. Failing to accomplish this, he slammed the blocks down upon the board and screamed.

"The next order of experiments will be to determine the ape's perception of dimensions. A board will have cut in it four square holes ranging from one to four inches wide. Blocks will be made to fit in them and the apes will be required to adjust each block in the proper hole.

"Another class of experiments will be to determine his perception of color. For this purpose will be used a set of wooden cups almost the shape of egg cups. Into these cups will be placed four balls. One cup and ball will be white, one red, one green and one black. Another set of balls will have one-half one color and the other half of a different color, and the ape will be taught to adjust the ball so as to conceal the color which is different from that of the cup.

"The most difficult work, of course, will be to teach the apes to utter certain sounds of human speech. Their vocal organs appear quite capable of uttering many of the simple sounds of our speech. Of four words selected for the purpose of teaching my favorite chimpanzee he mastered one in about two months, but the others took him longer. I am quite aware now why he was so much longer learning these other sounds. From past experience I shall be able to obviate these difficulties. The words I now teach consist of a single vowel element, to which is prefixed or suffixed a labial or nasal consonant. A few of them will contain diphthongs, which they seem capable of uttering. All words selected will be capable of striking concrete illustrations. It is doubtful if the apes can be made to understand the meaning of abstract nouns.

"I am provided with good photographic apparatus, with which I expect to be able to obtain instantaneous views of the lips of the animals while in the act of talking.

"During my first expedition I devised the means of having a gorilla photograph himself. On the present voyage I have a telephotograph attachment, and by this means I expect to secure photographs at much longer range. This will enable me to get good pictures of the animals without incurring the risk of losing my camera or possibly a leg.

"I also have a phonograph of the latest pattern, with which I will be able to record the sounds of the native speech, together with their songs and instrumental music. Besides this, I will be able to preserve the sounds or words uttered by the apes."

The report brought by Miss Simonton indicates that Professor Garner has put all his plans and instruments into successful operation.

The Kind of Man to Marry, from a Man's Standpoint.

AN alleged authority on mankind has given his views on the sort of men that make the best husbands. Among the really nice ones he classes the man who is fond of fishing, the lawyer and the all-round journalist.

He does not get enthusiastic over the popular doctor as a husband, and a musical genius or a man of letters gives him cold chills and shudders. The author, he says, is so fond of his fine sentences that he is disagreeable when the baby cries, and makes himself generally odious about his food and noise of the children, and any domestic infelicities that may come along.

All in all, the good journalist seems to have the most strong points. He is a bit of a philosopher, is likely to be practical, makes the best of what cannot be helped, and is full of alternatives. The lawyer is good to have in the house. He is likely to be alert, a good judge of human nature, a good talker and quite as fond of listening as of hearing the sound of his own voice. He studies human nature at home as well as abroad and is altogether a good fellow.

Faces Everybody Knows

Miss Gilmore has wonderful [illegible] cascades in long wavy bands about her [illegible]. Watch your magazine and you [illegible] see her. Perhaps she is best known [illegible] charming young lady who is washing [illegible] in a well known brand of soap.

But she, too, has had numerous adven[illegible]

Like Miss Longfellow, she is always in receipt of letters from would be suitors, which are turned over to her by firms who have published her pictures all over the country. But one of her unique experiences was posing in overalls for a firm which manufactures millions of pairs of these useful garments every year. This advertisement was circulated through the South and West, and more than five hundred lone bachelors and widowers hastened to indite their affections in black and white.

"They telephoned up and asked if I wanted the letters," said Miss Gilmore laughingly. "I told them I didn't. I found out afterward that the letters contained more than ten dollars' worth of stamps, and I am sorry I didn't say 'Yes.'

"Another time, at Atlantic City, I happened to stand near a certain well-known United States Senator from the Middle West watching a modeller making figures in wet sand. The Senator suddenly turned and spied me.

"Why, how do you do," he said. "I want you to meet my wife and daughter," and he presented me to them before I knew what he was about. It all went smoothly till he tried to think of my name. Then he was stuck, and appealed to me, apologizing for his poor memory.

"That gave me a chance to explain, and we had a great laugh over the mistake. He had seen my picture so often that he thought he really knew me.

"It's not always so pleasant, though, to remember with anything but joy the persistent attentions of a young man who frequented Broadway a year ago. He declared he would never marry any one but me, and that if he couldn't have me he would kill himself. From writing letters to advertisers he found out I was on the stage, and began to pester me at every possible opportunity.

More Than 500 Lone Bachelors Made Offers.

"How did I get rid of him? Well, I am not quite alone in the world, and if the young man in question would tell why he spent two weeks in seclusion in his hotel apartment and appeared afterward wearing blue goggles, perhaps you might guess.

"An old lady in San Francisco caused me a lot of bother, too. She insisted that I was the girl who had run off with her only son, from whom she had not heard for nearly a year. She even came to New York and threatened to make trouble for me if I didn't reveal the whereabouts of her son.

"As I had never seen the young man and had never been in California in my life, I was naturally unable to oblige her."

A friend of Miss Gilmore who trades in [illegible] Sea islands [illegible] a magazine open at a page bearing her portrait and a native cannibal chief after thoughtful inspection of her picture said "her make fine to eat."

Miss Mabelle Remington and Miss Maud Thomas are forever associated in the minds of the reading public with two complexion preparations of national renown, and the celebrated advertisements of a certain railroad were all posed by Miss Marion Murray.

An advertising girl whose beautiful face is puzzling a great many people just now, is a charming young woman who is identified with a big perfume house. Miss Mary B. Ashmead, the great expert in photographic illustration of advertising by pictures posed especially for each advertisement, was the discoverer of this [illegible], and she is keeping the prize all [illegible]

"She is from Philadelphia and she is not a model," said Miss Ashmead, sitting at her desk in the photographically decorated office she calls her "den." "I wouldn't tell you her name for any money. She is a personal friend of mine and she'd never forgive me. Her beautiful face and luxuriant hair have attracted a great deal of attention, and I am in receipt of scores of inquiries from artists who want to paint her. But I am not going to let them—at least, not just yet," she added.

"The queerest thing I ever knew happen to any of the advertising models of my acquaintance," said Miss Ashmead, "was the experience of a charming girl who posed juveniles for me. A St. Louis woman found her picture in her husband's pocket, and investigated till she found out the girl's name and address. Then she wrote a letter warning the girl to keep away from her husband. Of course the girl promptly assured her that she needn't worry. But the St. Louis woman wasn't satisfied. She came to New York and called on the young woman, making such a scene that the police had to be called in to remove her."

There are some men whose faces have become familiar through advertising, and they, too, find it is sometimes rather a nuisance to be so well known by sight.

When a [illegible] picture is cut out of a German magazine, pasted on an envelope, and with the addition of nothing but the words, "New York U. S. A." reaches him without a day's delay, he is getting to be about as well known as the Kaiser or Mr. Roosevelt. Yet that is what happened to James Keegan, of New York, and all because he allowed a friend to use his picture to advertise a certain brand of safety razor.

Mr. Keegan can't take a walk along Broadway without being greeted by scores of men who think he is an old acquaintance, and recently when he carelessly removed his hat in a downtown car his identity was at once made the subject of a wager. His face has been associated with this razor for about two years now, and he is known all over the world.

He dare not take a box at a theatre because the opera glass brigade would stare him out of the house. Not long since he took a trip to Hot Springs, and the first thing he saw in a store window as he stepped off the train was himself. In less than an hour people were [illegible] as the "Safety Razor" man and he decided that Mount Clemens would be a quieter retreat for an invalid. But the Detroit resort was just as bad, and Mr. Keegan declares that he will buy a farm up the river on purpose to be able to hide from the curious public.

John Hemingway, the English agent of an American [illegible] and [illegible] friend of Mr. Keegan, happened [illegible] picture in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, [illegible] it out, wrote across it, "Is this you, Jim?" and mailed it to his old friend.

Curious to relate, the safety razor has made a hit in China, where the Chinese use it on the tops of their heads, and from this far away region one day came a letter to Mr. Keegan. Chu Fong, the Chinese agent of the house, had used the famous picture in his advertising, and Herbert Malone, who had not seen Mr Keegan for fifteen years, promptly sat down and wrote to the razor company to find his old acquaintance's address.

But perhaps the limit of forbearance was reached when two Chicago dentists [illegible] the teeth in the picture. Dr Harper contended that the teeth were natural but of [illegible], there being little variation between the front and the back teeth. Dr Keene offered to bet that the teeth had been drawn in the picture, and the two dentists sent to Mr Keegan to referee the case.

He told them that some of the teeth had been touched up by the artist, but the others were natural, so the bet had to be declared off.

But the [illegible] Mr. Keegan [illegible] a serious matter, and nearly reached the point of declaration of war between him and Mr. Joseph Kaufman, who induced him first to loan his picture for advertising purposes.

Mr. Keegan didn't mind it very much when fifteen boy neighbors armed with [illegible] his face, intended for advertising in the stores of the neighborhood, met him one night at the subway station and escorted him home, and he is so accustomed to deciding bets made as to his identity with the safety razor face that he [illegible] do it in his sleep, but when it comes to love affairs he declares it is really going too far to be funny.

How the fair inamorata found out his home address remains a mystery. Mr. Kaufman denies that he gave it away, but Mr Keegan is more than half suspicious. At any rate, the secret escaped somehow.

And the time he had trying to keep pink envelopes out of his wife's hands was something awful. He had almost made up his mind to confess and ask help when the lady [illegible] had fallen so violently in love with [illegible] New York and call on [illegible]. The funny part of it was [illegible] she found he was married [illegible] insulted. Then she set out to meet him and tell him what she thought of him. Keegan had to use the fire escape instead of the elevator for something like two weeks, and his nerves are still unstrung from the harrowing experience.

One of the crew of Lieut. Peary's arctic ship told Mr Keegan that an Eskimo examined his razor picture critically and then asked Peary "why this man wear snow on his face?"

"Look! look! look whose here!" a Coney Island barker shouted at Keegan as he was [illegible] of the big shows, and after [illegible] not get away from the crowd [illegible] he got back to New York. "Still I'm [illegible]" says he. "I'm not on any whiskey [illegible] or Carrie Nation might recognize [illegible] hop my face in."

MISS RAY GILMORE

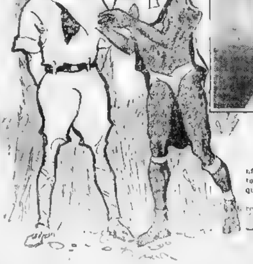
MR JAMES KEEGAN'S FACE.

MISS REMINGTON

"Why, how do you do!" Said the Senator.



"A friend of Miss Gilmore who trades in the South Sea islands carelessly left a magazine open at a page bearing her portrait and a cannibal chief after thoughtful inspection of the picture said, 'her make fine to eat.'"

The "Cocktail Girl" to Whom a Clergyman Wrote Begging Her Not to Use Her Beauty to Lure Men to Drink.

How to Tell True Love.

UNSELFISHNESS and [illegible] is the test of true love. Women discard the fair weather lover but cling to the friend and comrade who is never found [illegible].

Men are not all angels, as women often know to their grief, but many a man could have been saved if his wife's love had been true enough to have directed the course of events.

A woman's love is poor indeed when she [illegible] instead of throwing everything into the furnace.

No petty calculations of interest can affect it.

One of the hospital nurses was in love with him, and he had hoped to be rich enough some day to marry her.

His one agonized entreaty was that she should not be told where he was or what was the matter with him. But one day, when all hope was gone, a quiet little figure in black glided in, put her arms round him and courted death on his lips. She stayed to the end. With her it was one life, one love, for she never married.

Old maids, the world calls them: vestals who feel the sacred fire, and comfort us with the hope that true love still lingers in our [illegible] civilization.

Love of husband or lover is not all; there is the love of a child for its mother, a brother for his sister, the love of humanity that ought to permeate the world, making it a thousand times better than it is, bringing an era of peace and security to the toilers of the world.

We all hunger in our hearts for true love, even when we most affect to despise it—the beggar at our gates, the servants who work for us, the sorrowful, the poor, the lonely—aye, the highest and most wealthy in the land are often starving for true love!

To give it, pure in quality, devoid of the dross of selfishness, is to practise that charity that covers a multitude of sins, and as we give it [illegible] like the mystic roses that grew as they were plucked.

It is the golden key that will open the most obdurate heart, and the man or woman who has found true love is thrice blessed and need ask no more of life.

J—The Sharply Turned Back Front Brim Is One of the Features of the Latest Models.

For Daytime Wear Hats Are Yes, Really Growing Smaller. In Paris Small Toques are Even Now Being Worn. This Year's Millinery is Most Luxurious and Extravagant, yet the Woman with a Lean Pocket Book May Achieve a Smart Effective Hat.

"WOMEN have certainly no sense of proportion, or they would not so willingly adopt all the most outrageous fashions. Just now the hats are positive caricatures. Small women disappear bodily under them, stout women accentuate their size, tall women look like grenadiers of the British Guard, pretty women are swamped, plain ones look plainer—and yet they wear them, and yet the headgear rises and grows and swells in height and width and ponderosity and price. Recently a friend of mine gave $125 for a hat, and seemed surprised when I remonstrated on the amount. "But just think how much you get for it!" she said. And truly she was right, for the hat was covered with ospreys; it was a perfect massacre of the innocents. When will women grow less like savages, thatch themselves less "with the dead fleeces of sheep, the bark of vegetables, the pelt of furred beasts, and walk abroad a moving rag-screen, overheaped with shreds and tatters from the charnel-house of nature," as Carlyle rudely puts it? We ought to be more civilized in our dress and not deck ourselves out like Red Indians in their war-paint."

So writes my smart and elegant English friend, Lady Violet Greville, but let her possess her soul in patience.

For fashion has swung her sceptre again and has decreed that soon we shall emerge from the shadow of the enormous overhanging hat and let the light of day once more illuminate our features.

Abroad the daylight hours find Parisian women wearing most chic small toques, set well down upon their heads. On to the brim is pinned the waves of their softly undulated hair. Wings set aslant or a dashing Bird of Paradise waving from the side gives the needed characteristic touch.

Here we see hats diminishing in size each day. A vogue as pronounced as the one for overgrown hats is bound to early work its own destruction. The smart women, who, if they do not create fashions in New York, at least illustrate them, will not countenance a style which has become common.

So, unless you have heeded the warning signs and have invested in hats of moderate size, you must chop several inches off the brims of your chapeaux and take three reefs in the trimming. That is, in a hat destined for morning or afternoon wear. In the evening big, picturesque hats will long be worn.

American women have not taken up very eagerly the small theatre hat worn elsewhere. They find broad brims of satin or velvet, or softly-folded maline supporting long, luxurious feathers, or fairy-like aigrettes, too becoming to readily give up.

As if to go out in a blaze of glory the big hat, with the turned-down brim—variously called cloche, butter bowl or mushroom—has grown to a really enormous size. And how surprisingly long that model has been worn!

Milliners returning from abroad at the end of the Summer assured us that the day of the cloche hat was past. But in various and modified forms we see its outlines in many of the smartest hats. For fur hats, particularly, the turn-down brim is much liked—I suppose one of the reasons being that the fur lies so nicely on its slanting lines.

Hats rolling up off the face in front or on one side and brims bent sharply back at the side front will be much seen during the Winter. The hat with brim decidedly broader on one side than on the other grew naturally out of a necessity to have somewhere to rest the enormous masses of trimming being piled upon it. Hats with straight, flat brims, set upon the head without a suspicion of bandeau, have a certain distinction.

One of the most characteristic hats I have seen this year was a large flat hat, the side brim rather wider than back or front, the crown of medium height. The shape was transparently covered with black silk net, the edge bound with a wide band of black satin. Around the crown was pulled black satin, which ended in a chou at the left front. From this sprung a beautiful black Bird of Paradise, which swept out and back. This hat had a striking simplicity of effect, which told tremendously among all the overladen hats around it.

Almost everything but felt seems to be used in hat shapes. If by any chance a shape of felt is found it is so bound and draped with satin or velvet that it is hard to discover the original material. The wide bands of satin, silk or velvet binding the brims of hats are still used. Often the accent of the color used for trimming is repeated in this way. Satin hats, which were a fad of late Summer in Paris and were introduced here early in the season, are no longer good style, although a crown of satin is sometimes seen on a hat where there is a binding of satin around the brim.

Each day a new bird seems to be discovered to add to the stock of unrecognizable varieties of feathers. Such wonderful birds they are—with plumage never seen on land or sea! But they are most effective, it must be confessed.

Ostrich feathers hold their own. Some of the long, heavy-headed plumes are marvels of [illegible]. Wings and whole birds are seen on hats everywhere. Quaint little owls' heads and brilliant green parrots' heads stuck on long hatpins have come to join the happy aviary.

Quite novel and effective are the ways discovered of using tulle. I saw a well-known woman driving up Fifth avenue the other day with her hat apparently composed of two handfuls of electric blue and purple tulle, just crushed together a little and attached to a brim by a pin or two. Big black hats having a sole trimming of a number of black tulle bows, lightly wired and massed in front, are being exploited by one of New York's most fashionable milliners. A hat with four huge choux of pale blue, pale pink, yellow and lavender tulle completely surrounding the crown and having no other trimming, was a novelty I saw the other day. Masses of tulle covering the crowns of hats, caught in here and there with a rose or two, an idea imported from abroad last Summer, is being recommended by some milliners for evening and carriage wear this Winter.

Toques of fur are seen on many hats. Sometimes it is used lavishly, but more often a band of sable or the skin of one small ermine is considered sufficient for a hat. Occasionally the tails of ermine are appliqued on black or white tulle, the little ermine heads catching the trimming here and there. Chinchilla is being used in combination with blue. Copenhagen blue and the soft gray of this fur make a delightful blending of color.

A new effect is gained by the use of cord and tassels on the hat of black broadtail pictured in the illustration marked "E." This is one of the Winter's best models in fur hats and could be successfully copied in almost any fur. Pony skins can be bought for from four to ten dollars, according to size and quality, so a hat of fur to match your new Russian pony coat is not beyond the means of even a depleted purse—as, alas, so many of ours are just now!

If you come across a bit of richly colored silk embroidery banding in your wanderings around the shops, invest in it for use on your next new hat. For these bands of silk embroidery laid around the crown do much toward giving an air to an otherwise unostentatious hat. Of course, the handsomer and more richly colored the embroidery the better. Often this embroidered band, with a feather aigretta of some kind, forms the only trimming of a small hat.

Another simple, but effective, trimming is seen in the sketch "D." It is simply a big bow of ribbon laid on either side of the crown. These bows are wired to give them their very jaunty effect.

Some of this Winter's flowers in the millinery world are charming. Flowers of velvet—morning glories, Easter lilies, orchids and vivid scarlet poinsettia, with roses as big as small cabbages in weird colorings of poisonous-looking green and purple are seen. A big bouquet of such natural-looking roses that they might have come straight from a Summer garden forms the trimming of the hat marked "G." This high-crowned shape is one of the season's favorites.

A glint of gold or silver speaks from many of the more elaborate hats. Gold lace, fine and diaphanous, is used to edge satin bows and rosettes. Gold tassels and balls make a finish for bow ends. One gorgeous hat of all gold tissue I saw in a milliner's window. A huge rose with clustering leaves, looking as if carved from solid gold, was its trimming.

The stripes which have been haunting one's wardrobes in cloths and silks have invaded the world of hats. Broad hats, some of them with down-turned brims, are seen faced with silk of Pekin stripes in black and white. It is daring, but effective. Again, brims are faced with taffeta silk laid in folds. This is illustrated in the hat marked "A".

A hat, for theatre wear, I admired in one of New York's fashionable Fifth avenue shops, and an obliging saleswoman assured me it was "quite reasonable—only $85." It's trimming consisted of a wired bow of lace and a band of sable around the crown. You may see it pictured in illustration "H."

Being of an economical and also an inquiring turn of mind, I took the trouble to figure out how much it could be copied for in a reasonable way. As the result of my figuring I discovered that:

The hat itself, made of shirred net on a wire frame, my milliner would make for me for from $4 to $6; or, if I was sufficiently skilled to cover a frame myself, then the cost would be fifty cents for the wire hat frame; a yard of white dotted silk net at $1 a yard, and half a yard of satin for the brim binding at $1.50 a yard.

I found that princess or Pierre lace insertion, at from $2 to $3 a yard, could be used for the bow, which took three yards of lace. Black velvet ribbon could be substituted for the sable with good effect. Of this I needed three-quarters of a yard at fifty cents a yard. Adding to this the small etceteras of wire for shaping the bow and sewing silk, my hat would cost less than $10, which is decidedly better than $85, is it not?

Merridew [illegible] on the press.

ON one of the interleaves of her B[ible] she drew up a scheme. She fixed the times at which to [illegible] for study; those for [illegible] for prayer. The body must be attended to as well as the mind [illegible] set herself a number of strenuous physical exercises [illegible] the habit of [illegible] the hour of her delivery arrived she would not fail, as [illegible] want of [illegible].

She was occupied with this when Mrs. Tisley brought in her dinner. It was a very simple meal [illegible] to eat, and it was [illegible] was no [illegible]. She ate it [illegible] of her [illegible].

After [illegible] to her plan of getting exercise, she first walked from corner [illegible] asked for would be provided as soon [illegible].

Then more exercises followed, severe and strenuous this time, and at last to bed to think, not of her troubles, but of the [illegible] over his difficulties and of the lesson [illegible] could [illegible].

The next day saw her routine in full operation, and when night came again she was astonished to find how easily the day had passed.

In this way several days passed. She neither heard nor saw anything of Merridew; she had exchanged scarcely a dozen words with her jailer. She did not even know whether Merridew was in the house.

Then all suddenly and unexpectedly came a chance of escape.

She had been a prisoner for ten days, and when the woman brought up her tea, Olive saw she had been drinking heavily. She lurched, and nearly let the tray fall, grumbling incoh[erently] [illegible] and interlarding her speech with oaths.

Apparently angered that Olive would not answer her, she went out of the room and slammed the door behind her—omitting to either lock or bolt it.

Olive listened to her steps as she went downstairs, and [illegible] the door, silent [illegible].

It was unfastened.

Instantly her mind was made up. Putting on her hat and jacket she stole out on to the landing and listened. Mrs. Tisley was somewhere in the back of the house.

She crept down the narrow, creaking stairs, and as she reached the bottom the [woman] heard her and came lurching out.

"What does this mean? Go back at once," she [illegible].

"I am going for a walk. I must have some fresh air," replied Olive firmly.

With an oath Mrs. Tisley caught at her dress to stop her.

But Olive prevented that without any difficulty and pushed her away. "You cannot stop me," she said. The reply was another oath and another rush at her. This time, using more force, Olive thrust her [away] and she staggered back unsteadily and fell.

The way to freedom was open, and Olive ran to the front door.

But as she laid her hand on the lock she started with a little cry of dismay at a sound which reached her from the outside. [illegible], however, she threw open the door to [illegible].

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Marriage.

T[illegible] Olive had opened the door [illegible] attempt to escape [illegible]. As the sound of the horn had [illegible] her, a motor car was [illegible] with Merridew in it.

As she stood a moment hesitating whether [illegible] to risk flight, the woman [illegible] in from behind, seized her, and [illegible] the passage.

Mrs. Tisley followed her up the stairs, [swearing] freely and vowing vengeance, and [as] she was locking the door, Olive warned [her] not to tell Merridew.

But [illegible] not failed to [illegible] and the moment he entered [illegible] Olive heard him rating the woman in stern, angry tones on account of [illegible].

Then Olive was brought down; and his [illegible] showed her that the attempt [wa]s likely to cost her dear.

"So I arrived just in time, it seems," he said without any preface of assumed politeness. "You very nearly succeeded in making your escape, thanks to this blundering fool's drunkenness. Well, this has got to cease, and you had better know it at [once]. I am taking no more risks of that [kind]."

"And that means—what?" asked Olive, meeting his angry look firmly.

"I came down to ask you to let our marriage [illegible]. But after this, I tell you it must. Must. Understand [illegible]. You [illegible] answer several times. I shall not [illegible].

"I dare say you'd rather stop on here on the chance of repeating more successfully the attempt that has just failed. But you've opened my eyes in time. I meant to get the marriage over and then let you go at once, as I told you before. Now I take that back. I have obtained the needed license and the permission to have the ceremony take place here in this house, and [illegible]."

Olive made no attempt [illegible].

"You've got the best of [illegible] I won't trust a man in the [illegible] would wheedle round [illegible]. I [illegible] here, therefore, and shall send at once for the clergyman who will marry us. He [illegible] to your room and make up your mind to [illegible] it. I'll have no more of this sort of fooling. And mind, if you still refuse, the thing will be done all the same, but the results to you will not be pleasant."

Without a word Olive returned to her [room]; M[erridew] [illegible] followed and locked and bolted the door upon her.

[illegible] Olive waver in her [illegible] was [illegible] the crisis had come. She [ha]d entirely recovered her strength and [illegible] health and spirits, despite [illegible] in the one small room.

[illegible] have to be faced some time, and she would as soon face it at once as later. In that mood she set about her usual evening tasks, her mind [full]y made up and her resolve as strong as ever.

The next day found her just the same. Mrs. Tisley brought her meals as usual, but there was an obvious change in the woman's manner. She was now talkative and abusive. She declared Olive had ruined her and that she would have her revenge in some way. This was at breakfast time, and when she brought up the dinner it was clear she had been brooding over her grievances as well as seeking comfort again in the bottle.

Olive told her at last to leave the room; and angered by this, the woman darted forward and tried to strike her. There was a struggle between them in which Olive found that she was much the stronger of the two; and she had all but overpowered her when Merridew entered, attracted by the noise.

He sent the woman downstairs and when [she] explained what had occurred, he [illegible] and told her it served her right [for] having made an enemy of the other, and [that] the time might soon come when she [would] have bitter cause to repent what [she ha]d done.

That evening, as Merridew had said, the clergyman arrived and was brought up to her room. Olive had nourished the secret [h]ope that he would prove a friend and would take her side. But the moment she saw him the hope died.

He was one of those degraded scoundrels some few of whom are to be found in the ranks of the clergy, who disgrace not only the cloth they wear but the very name of manhood—a drunken, dissipated, worthless rascal, who was seemingly in Merridew's power, and who cringed to him and fawned on him with a subserviance that was as disgusting to witness as it was likely to prove dangerous to Olive.

He had been properly coached as to what to believe and how to act in regard to Olive; and he smirked and simpered vacuously as he fixed his bleary, drink-watery eyes on her, rubbing his hands over and over while he mumbled out some fatuous and inane congratulations.

"What do you mean, sir?" asked Olive, indignantly and in disgust.

He was more than half intoxicated; his breath came heavily and reeked of drink, and he stumbled in his speech.

"Are you a minister of the Gospel, sir?" she asked, so sharply that he started.

"What cher mean? Whatsh she me[an], Merridew? Am I a clergyman? Course I am. Whom the Church bindeth ——"

"Silence, sir! I marvel [illegible] not ashamed to speak of [illegible] disgrace so shamefully."

He started again, [glanced] at Mer[ridew] and mumbled something about Olive being a regular spitfire.

"I know why you have [illegible] here, of course, [illegible] form a ceremony of marriage. But there will be no marriage to which I am a p[arty]. If you were a man I would appeal to your sense of honor and manliness to help a defenceless girl, against the pe[rsecution] of your employer. But he has chosen [you] as a fit creature for his abominable [purpose], and any appeal of the [illegible] would [be] [useless]. It is enough then that I tell [you] there will be no marriage. You can therefore return to your [illegible]."

He grinned in bleared astonishment. "What a little devil it is," he muttered, turning to Merridew.

"You knew what to expect. I told you she would pretend she was unwilling. We'd better get [illegible]."

"Wait," cried Olive, so sternly that he backed away a pace or two. "I w[ill] tell you what perhaps you do not expect. What is your name?"

"I am the Rev. Charles Dustl—Dustl—Dustledon," he replied, stumbling over the name so that it was scarcely intelligible.

"You are so intoxicated that you cannot even pronounce your own name; but not perhaps too much so to understand me. I [illegible] who know that I would never [illegible] marry [this] man. I am being forced by him into [thi]s; and if you dare to lend yourself to be [illegible] in this villainy you will have to answer for your crime to the law."

The color left his flabby cheeks at this [an]d his watery eyes were full of fear as he turned them on Merridew. "Hoste, I ——" he began when Merridew cut him [shor]t.

"You can choose. Instead [illegible]," he said, fixing his eyes on him.

"[H]ere, look here," said the man, drawing his employer into a corner, where they spoke together in low tones. Olive heard [illegible] the effect that nothing could [illegible] not consent. But in the [illegible] understand. [illegible] he winked at [illegible].

"[S]he has lied to you, sir. I am in terrible earnest. And I warn you again that [if] you persevere you will have to answer [fo]r your offence."

[illegible] as if understanding her [an]d nodded indulgently.

[Mer]ridew [illegible] Mrs. T[isley] and, taking out a prayer book, the drunken clerk began to mumble the words of the Marriage Service.

When he came to the questions to Merridew and Olive, the former replied: "Yes," in a loud, firm voice, but Olive cried in righteous indignation:

"No! No! No! Not while I have breath to refuse."

But he took no notice and mumbled on to the end in his thick, besotted, rambling accents.

Meanwhile Merridew had seized Olive's hand and forced a ring on her finger. But the instant he released her she tore it off and flung it from her. As soon as the ceremony was concluded the man shambled out of the room, followed by Mrs. Tisley, with Merridew behind them.

"SHE STAGGERED BACK UNSTEADILY AND FELL."

About an hour after[ward] Merridew came up alone bringing a paper.

He laid it on the table and held a pen toward Olive. "You will sign this," he said sternly.

She had mastered the furious passion which had possessed her at the close of the marriage ceremony.

"What is it?" she asked, calmly.

"The register of our marriage. The legal evidence that we are man and wife."

"Do you think you can force me?"

"I mean to. Your life depends upon your signing that paper. Listen to me carefully, for I mean every word I say. If you sign this you can go free. If you refuse, the paper will still be signed, and in a writing that no one will be able to distinguish from yours. The only person a[ble] to dispute the signature will be yourself; and you—will not live to object."

"Then I will die," said Olive at once, in a tone of implacable firmness.

"I will give you one hour in which to change your mind."

He went out of the room. Then Olive fell on her knees and prayed with soulful earnestness and fervor for strength. Not for a fraction of a second did she waver, and it was not strength for that she sought, but to endure what might be done to her.

She knew Merridew well enough to understand that he was in deadly earnest in the threat he had uttered, and knew also that he was villain enough to carry it into execution. She understood the reasons which now actuated him. If this shameful burlesque of a marriage could not be upset he had gained all that he needed, and her life was no longer of any use to him. Her death would serve him better, and she believed that, with her signature forged to the certificate, he could gain the end for which alone he had wished her to be his [wi]fe.

She was still on her knees when he re[tur]ned. She rose hastily as he entered.

"I have come for your answer," he said shortly.

"You have had it already. I have no other," she replied as shortly.

"You know I shall keep my word? You [ar]e absolutely in my power."

"No. I am in God's hands—not yours."

"We shall see," he answered with a sneer. "You had better make haste and pray to Him, for a few hours will see whether you'll get help. I shall keep my word. That I swear. Nothing shall turn me [fro]m it now."

And with that he left her and shot home the bolts on her door.

CHAPTER XXXV

Sentenced to Die.

WHEN Gilbert Merridew left the room Olive remained a few seconds gazing after him, as still as if she had [ro]oted to the spot.

[The]n with a deep sigh, she turned away [and sa]t down on the bed. She was very [clo]se to despair in those moments. It seemed almost as if Heaven had deserted her and that this man was to have his way.

But the next instant she was again on her feet, full of self-reproach for her passing weakness. Her courage revived and her faith was once more as strong as ever. The way of escape from the peril would still be found, and she must brace herself to be ready for it.

With a rare self command she set herself to go through the exercises which were her nightly task before going to bed, and she was even more earnest in their performance than usual.

Then she threw herself on her knees for her prayers. These were longer and more strenuous than on the preceding nights, and they gave her the comfort and solace she needed so desperately. She rose from them with something of the fierce-wrought fervor of a martyr, feeling that in that moment she could have faced death without a tremor of weakness.

So strong was her conviction that no harm would be allowed to come to her that she would not even give way to her fears sufficiently to lie down in her clothes. It would be a sign of weakness and faltering [faith] to make even so slight a departure from her usual custom.

It had always been her habit to wedge the chair under the handle of the door in such a position that if it were forced away by any one entering she would be awakened. But to-night she hesitated whether to take even that precaution.

She did it, however, and with that slight barrier between her and the man who threatened her with death, she lay down and slept soundly.

(To Be Continued Next Sunday.)

Sam Loyd's Puzzle (See Back Page)

ONCE more the umpires of the great Puzzle Contest, in which $10,000 worth of prizes are to be distributed among the successful solvers of the puzzles, ask the kind indulgence of the interested, not to say impatient, competitors.

It was a stupendous task, even for a corps of expert puzzlists—by selection and elimination—upon the principle of the survival of the fittest—to pick out a couple of thousand probable prize winners.

But this has at last been done, and next Sunday we shall be prepared to make the final award, which, it is to be hoped, will repay the clever ones for what all hands describe as most enjoyable and beneficial brain work.

One and all have become interested in this new school of mental gymnastics and are already amply repaid for the labor devoted to the study. Now for the final distributions of diplomas and souvenirs to the graduating class!

SAM LOYD.

"HARD WORK"

These Are Thoughtful Days for Thousands of "Big" and "Little" Men

THESE are days of serious thinking. The man who called himself rich yesterday is worrying about the bills of to-morrow. Men whose plans were all laid out for large, quick and comfortable fortune-making see those plans shattered.

Legitimate business that lives necessarily on credit finds credit very sick and unwilling to respond. Many a one who has confided his money to another for safe-keeping cannot get it when he asks for it.

These are thoughtful days for little men, and even more thoughtful days for the bigger men—using the words "big" and "little" from the money point of view.

* * *

Of course, the hard times are not going to last. The stupid, artificial, unnecessary "panic" will not last. The weak-minded, timid individuals who are hoarding away a few dollars and harming general prosperity will recover their senses. This cloud will pass—after teaching us useful lessons. Those that are innocent, unfortunately, will suffer most. Men and women who have worked steadily and faithfully for modest pay have in many cases been discharged from the work and deprived of the opportunity to earn the pay, and still others WILL be discharged. It will be hard to make good their loss to them. They are "the small people" upon whom the heaviest load always falls. They carry the burden, and WILL carry it until they learn to unite as human beings, as voters, as thinkers, and make up by the power of numbers and the power of FIXED PURPOSE, what they lack in individual financial strength.

* * *

There is great discussion as to RESPONSIBILITY for present conditions. One respectable gentleman blamed the American people for spending too much money. An increasing number blame the President of the United States.

A long time ago this newspaper pointed out the fact that this nation of business men and business people, dealing with business problems, ran serious risks when it not only gave the presidency to Theodore Roosevelt, WHO HAD NEVER EARNED HIS OWN LIVING, but also allowed him to exceed his constitutional rights and powers.

Various causes are at the bottom of our financial troubles. Mr. Roosevelt is ONE of them. It certainly was unwise to allow a man of no experience, no practical ability or training, full of the self-sufficient vanity and "cock-sureness" of the young aristocrat, who inherits wealth, to govern and make new laws for a nation of working people and business people.

It is an unfortunate thing for the country that an inexperienced man, swollen with vanity and undeserved applause, should have dashed about like a wild animal in a toy store, smashing things generally. It is to be regretted that Theodore Roosevelt, unwilling or unable to pick out the big individual criminals and punish THEM as they deserved, should have been allowed to attack national credit and national prosperity. That he should have been allowed to punish innocent owners of property and give fresh opportunities for enormous profits and enormous NEW fortunes to the untouched giants of fraud who now absorb, at the panic prices which Roosevelt helped to create, the investments of the little people.

* * *

There is no use crying over spilled milk. The French people were wise enough not to waste time in lamentations after they had allowed Boulanger to make fools of them for a while.

The American people have been made fools, they have been made poorer, they have been put out of work by a President ignorant of American conditions, by a self-imagined aristocrat and chronic office holder, directed and ruled by Root, the Tweed lawyer and the paid attorney of the most disreputable financial scoundrels.

Spilled milk is spilled and GONE. Roosevelt's term draws to its close. MUCH AGAINST HIS WILL AND AGAINST HIS INTENTION, HE WILL KEEP HIS PROMISE AS TO A THIRD TERM—OR THE PEOPLE WILL KEEP IT FOR HIM.

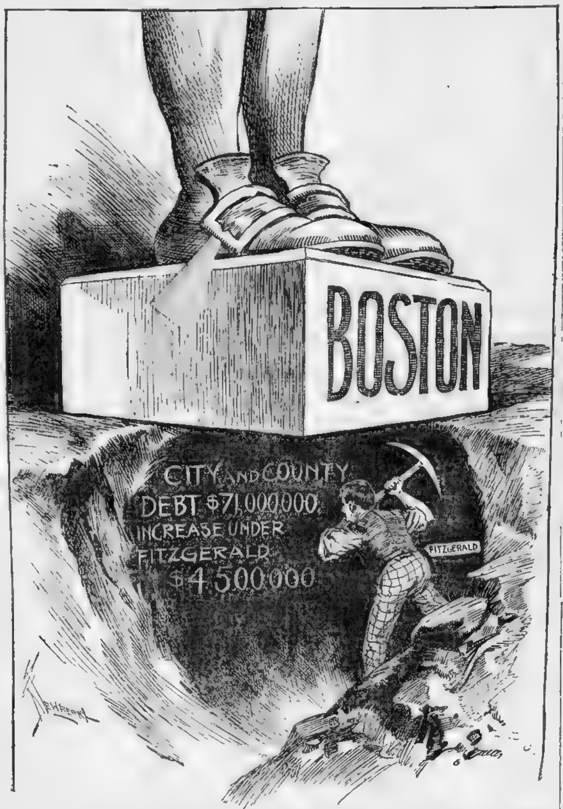
* * *

Hard work will restore the lost accumulations of money. Hard work, unfortunately, will not give back to discharged employes the lost hours. But HARD THINKING may more than make up to them for the loss of work. If they think hard ENOUGH about their duties and their power as citizens and voters, if their thought results in sane voting for self-protection, their undeserved hardship will not be entirely wasted

The business man, the young man, the old, all of us have got to get the work and WORK HARD

Some rocks have tumbled down and blocked up the door of opportunity. We must get them away, smash them, roll them, and go through the door anyhow.

THE PIT.



BOSTON
CITY AND COUNTY DEBT $71,000,000
INCREASE UNDER FITZGERALD $4,500,000
FITZGERALD

Above in a cartoon is the impressive story of Boston finance. Look at the picture and reflect on it. If you share in Boston's burdens, DIRECTLY as a taxpayer, or INDIRECTLY in the payment of high rent, or any of the other indirect taxes which oppress even the humblest citizen as a result of public extravagance, you will appreciate the peril of Boston builded upon a PIT of GRAFT and RECKLESS WASTE OF THE PEOPLE'S MONEY.

Fortunately, the country, its resources, its workers—WHO ARE ITS WEALTH—are still here. We have had a panic of foolishness, not a panic of disaster. Crops have not failed, cattle and human beings have not been destroyed by floods or pestilence. We have not had senseless, brutal war to kill off the young, spread disease, build up pensions and fraudulent contractors. The country, with its resources untouched, its wonderful industrial development, is the greatest and the richest in the world. Many of its citizens made a mistake in their foolish, half-hysterical enthusiasm for a monumental national egotist, and he, with his ignorant, blunderbuss methods, has made them pay dearly for their hysteria.

HARD WORK WILL REMEDY IT ALL.

* * *

The foolish to-day, the failures to-morrow, are those that hoard a little money, those that hesitate about a new enterprise, those that shiver and shake, not knowing what to do.

GET TO WORK. To the man of action and courage this day will be looked upon as the lucky day in a life. The revival from this check will be marvellous. The man who gets under way with his enterprise NOW will be on the top of a great wave in a very short time from to-day.

The man who wisely buys stocks or real estate, or any other thing OF ACTUAL VALUE at this moment will congratulate himself before many months have passed

Sheep that rush over a precipice, pushing each other, going to destruction to escape an unreal, imagined danger are no more foolish than those that take seriously the present conditions and treat them as though they were permanent

* * *

A thousand millions of gold in the United States Treasury.

The potential prosperity of this country is beyond conception. The opportunity for success to-day is beyond exaggeration.

* * *

In the Middle Ages every once in a while some goose of a prophet announced the end of the world for a certain day. The gullible creatures who thought the world WOULD end put on white nightgowns and climbed to the hill tops to be ready. WISER ONES BOUGHT AT LOW PRICES THE THINGS LEFT BEHIND BY THE GULLIBLE.

When the scare was over, and the world did NOT come to an end, the people in the white nightgowns felt foolish.

This is about the same kind of a thing, when to-day's foolish, in the face of the wonderful national prosperity, believe that the end of the world is coming, that the dollars are sick and will soon all die.

But the wise know better. THEY will work, THEY will dig, THEY will take up the property that the foolish panic-stricken are throwing overboard.

This great opportunity like every other is the opportunity of the hard worker

Work, save, but DON'T HOARD. Invest your dollars as you get them, watch your chances. That which was worth a hundred dollars a year ago and that now sells for thirty will be worth a hundred and twenty two years from now.

WORK. THIS IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY, IF YOU HAVE THE REAL STUFF IN YOU.

THE MAN WHO IS "TIRED OF POLITICS"

IN this country politics mean government. On the kind of government we have depend the happiness and prosperity of the people.

After a campaign spent in violent discussion of issues and candidates, speech-making, torch-light processions and ratification meetings, the average American votes, and announces wearily that he thanks Heaven there will not be another election for a year or two.

It is then that the boss, whose livelihood is got out of politics, goes seriously to work.

He doesn't tire of politics. He cannot afford to.

As soon as the noise of one election dies away he is busy arranging for the next.

He lines up the candidates he has elected and compels them to make good their promises of patronage.

That patronage is distributed where it will do the most good politically.

While the citizen whose interests are at stake is resting from the Herculean labor of listening to a few speeches and reading a few columns of political news, the professional politician is reaping his harvest in contracts, jobs and all the manifold and multiform graft that enriches him.

It is the boss, not the people, who calls the elected candidate to account and sees that he performs the things he is pledged to perform.

It is the boss, and not the people, who watches every action of the new office-holder, to decide whether he is entitled to another nomination.

It is the boss, and not the people, who takes care that every appointive position down to the lowest is filled with serviceable men.

And, of course, the boss judges fitness by his own standards, not those of the people.

The pledges whose fulfilment he exacts are pledges to him, not pledges to the voters.

Fitness for renomination depends, in his eyes, on willingness to serve him and the powerful backers behind him.

And all the little appointive positions are filled by him with a careful eye, not to the interests of the public, but to his own interests and those of the big grafters for whom he is working.

All this is done while the voter is too tired of politics to notice what is going on.

At the beginning of the next campaign the boss's work is done.

Enough graft has been extracted from national or State or municipal government to pay all the expenses of the campaign and leave a handsome margin of profit.

The "wrong vote" machine is in working order.

And in the few weeks of the campaign, when the people are beginning again to sit up and take political notice, the boss can afford to behave so circumspectly that only by going into the past records of his candidates can anything wrong be found in his methods.

In short, the boss—and the boss in politics means organized corruption—builds his success on the general weariness of politics that follows a campaign.

There is one certain way to dispose of him and the rottenness on which he feeds.

That way is to stop getting tired of politics.

If, after every election, the voters took care that pre-election pledges to them were fulfilled one-half as carefully as the boss exacts the carrying out of pledges to HIM, no candidate would dare go wrong in office.

If a Governor or Mayor or any official in the service of the people knew that his every appointment would be watched as closely by the voters as it is by the boss he would not dare make any but good appointments.

Despite the boss's idea that government is for his benefit, the founders of this Republic intended it to be for the people.

But to have a government of their own the people must take an interest in it, not only in time of election, but all the year round.

Under a watchful public eye machines to secure crooked votes could not be built up. Office-holders could not serve special interests. Deals and jobs would be impossible. Graft could not exist.

But while men think of politics only through the weeks preceding an election, and cheerfully forget all about their public affairs the rest of the year, they must expect bosses to rule them and deliver them over to be despoiled by the bigger grafters for whom the bosses merely farm on shares.

TEDDY-B AND TEDDY-G THE BEAR DETECTIVES

II.— A Wolf Caught In His Own Trap

ONE evening late before they went to sleep
The Bears were chatting of Little Bo-Peep
And the fun they had and the weaver old
And how wool from tails keeps out the cold,
When their telephone rang so loud and long
They knew at once there was something wrong,
"Hello! Hello!" said TEDDY-G,
"Speak louder, please! Yes, this is he;
The name again? Little Red what?
Red Riding! Yes! That part I've got.
Oh! Little Red Riding Hood! That's the name.
How are you, child? Yes, I'm the same."
And then he listened and his face was sad
And now and then he said, "Too bad!"
And at last he answered, "We'll take the case
And bive that wolf a lively chase."

"I know her story," said TEDDY-B,
"I can tell you every word, you'll see.
She's an only child, and sweet and good,
'Twas brilliant red, and a cloak the same.
And that is how she got her name,
One day she crossed a wood, 'tis said,
To visit her grandmother ill in bed,
And to carry a basket of things to eat!
In the lonely wood a wolf came by
Who was very polite in asking why
She crossed the wood, and her age, and name.
She answered kindly, he seemed so tame,
And told him about her Grannie ill
In her pretty home on a little hill.
He looked in her basket, then said good-day,
And went off through the wood along the way,
But the thing that happened is sad to relate;
The wolf that dear old Grannie ate
And then to fool Red Riding Hood
Who was tramping along through the lonely wood,
He dressed in Grannie's gown and cap
And got into bed to have a nap
With one ear open so he could hear
When Red Riding Hood came tripping near.
And when she came he said, 'Come in;
I'm Gannie, dear,' and he began to grin
And to pretend that he was kind and good
So that he could eat Red Riding Hood.
But the child got scared and away she ran
Till she found in the wood a working man
Who saved her from the wolf that day:
He didn't kill him, as some folks say,
But simply chased the wolf away."

"You know the story," said TEDDY-G,
"But how you heard it, I don't see."
"Oh, I'm a detective, brave and bold,
And detectives know things without being told,
But what does she want, that little mite,"
Said TEDDY-B, "so late at night?"
"She wants that wolf," said TEDDY-G,
"Hung by the ears on a hemlock tree,
And I, for one, won't eat or drink,
Or waste a minute, or sleep a wink,
Till I get him there both high and tight
And pull that rope with all my might."

They tramped all night through the darkest wood
To the home of Little Red Riding Hood,
Where they met the child next day at eight;
She was waiting for them at the garden gate
And took them in and gave them chairs
And told her mother of these Teddy Bears,
And answered questions till they understood
And said she'd help them all she could.

"I have a plan," said TEDDY-G,
"A Little Red Riding Hood I shall be;
And I'll look the part, both young and sweet;
I'll take a basket of things to eat;
The wood I'll cross and flowers I'll pick,
And I'll meet the wolf and make him sick,
And bring him back here good and dead."
"Not just that way," said TEDDY-B,
"You send him through the wood to me
And I in Grannie's house shall hide
And catch him when he gets inside."
"I like the plan," said Red Riding Hood,
And her mother, too, said she thought it good.

In half an hour TEDDY-G was dressed
In Little Red Riding Hood's very best,
And with basket filled with things to eat
He started out the wolf to meet;
While TEDDY-B with ax and gun,
Went on ahead on a lively run
To reach the cottage and get inside,
And there for the hungry wolf to hide.

"Good day," said the wolf, "Miss Riding Hood"
When he met TEDDY-G in the lonely wood.
"And where are you going to-day?" said he
"I'm going to Grannie's," said TEDDY-G.
"May I go with you," the wolf replied,
"And carry the basket by your side?"

"Thank you so much," said TEDDY-G,
"The basket is heavy, as you shall see,
But you come along and show the way;
For it's hard to find the path to-day."

So on they walked, the wolf and bear,
Resting the basket here and there,
And chatting about the things folks wear
And the birds they heard and their music shrill,
Till they reached the cottage on the hill.

The wolf stepped up, he didn't ring,
But rapped on the door and pulled the string,
And opened the door, when TEDDY-B
Grabbed him so quick he couldn't see,
And tied a string on his mouth so tight

"In half an hour TEDDY-G was dressed in Little Red Riding Hood's very best."

He couldn't speak and couldn't bite;
And TEDDY-G tied fast his feet
And sat him down an a rocking seat
And showed him quickly, then and there,
That Red Riding Hood was a Teddy Bear;
While TEDDY-B laid down the law
And boxed his ears with his hairy paw;
And then they took him through the wood
To the home of Little Red Riding Hood.

They did as Red Riding Hood had said
And tied a rope around his head;
And to both his ears they made it tight;
Then pulled him up to the greatest height
And jerked him hard on the hemlock tree
Till he cried "Enough," and said that he Would ever after try to be
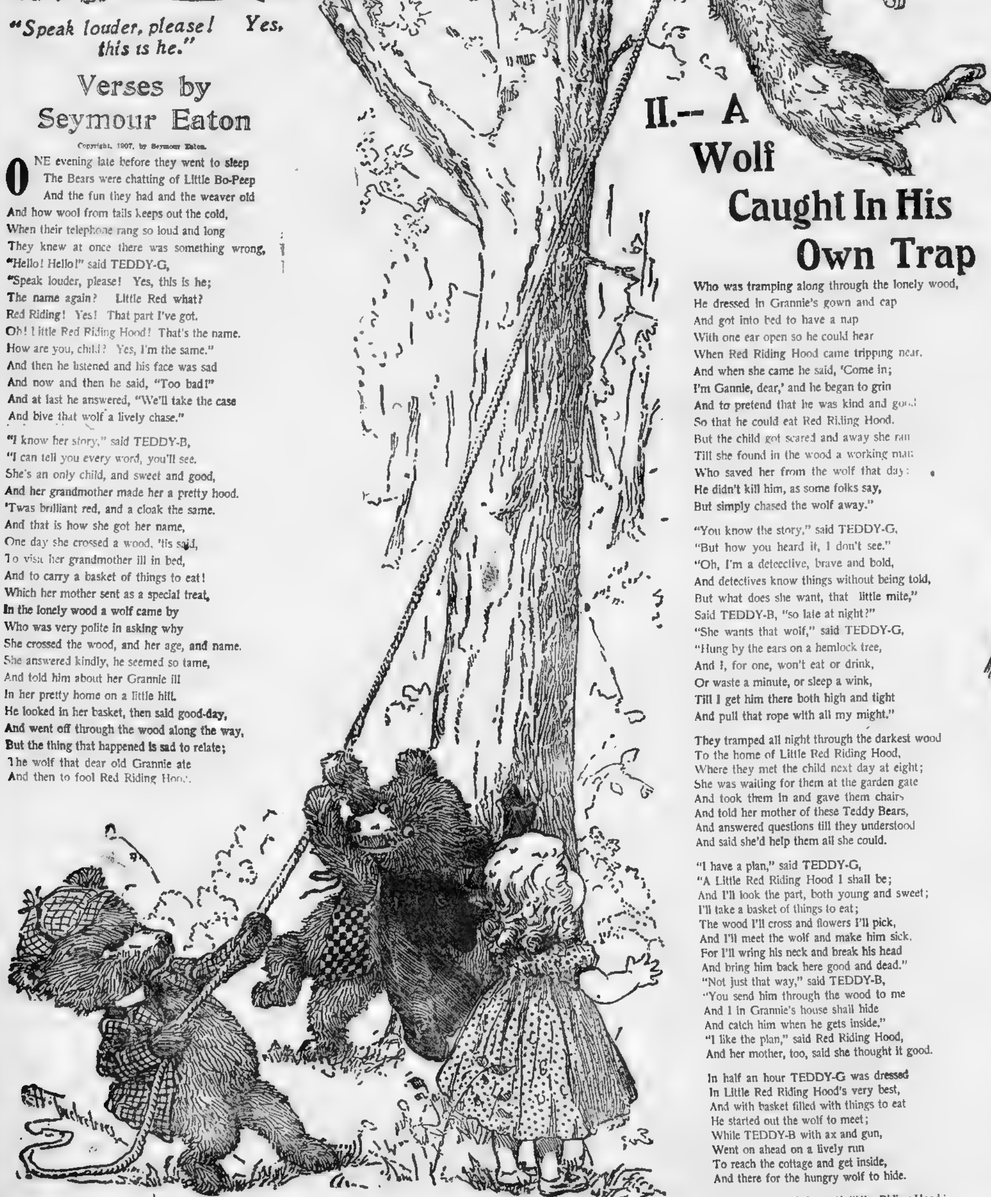
A decent wolf and never bite;
And girls and grannies, treat them right;
And do his best in that lonely wood
To teach all wolves to be square and good
And always kind to Red Riding Hood.

TEDDY-G let him down and set him free
And told him to run like sixty-three.
And never since in field or wood
Has a wolf been seen by Red Riding Hood.



"Then pulled him up to the greatest height and jerked him hard on the hemlock tree."

The Castle Square singers take up a fine old opera, while to the Globe comes a Herne success, and the Boston Theatre Stock Company brings out "Trilby." Hollis Street Theatre

The Hollis will be truly the home of mirth and melody for the next two weeks, for Hattie Williams, she of the flashing black eyes and the [illegible] returns to Boston to-morrow with all [illegible] [illegible]

Boston Theatre

At the Boston Theatre this week will be [illegible] first put on the stage. At the Boston Theatre particular attention is paid to the [illegible] Colonel Kaw, Otis Thayer; [illegible] Mrs. Bagot, Rose [illegible] Vinard, Lucile LaVerne; Angele, Mary Sanders; Honorine, Maida Reade.

Castle Square Theatre

Scotland is not often the scene of comic opera, but in "Rob Roy" Reginald de Koven and [illegible] Smith [illegible] Scotland and the [illegible]

Keith's Theatre

FROM ACROSS THE FOOTLIGHTS

BY "THE OBSERVER"

NEXT Tuesday evening Miss Louise Le Baron will be given a complimentary testimonial at the Castle Square. Miss Le Baron will appear as Flora MacDonald in "Rob Roy," a role that suits both her piquant style and her dramatic method. The management has prepared a souvenir containing a fine portrait of Miss Le Baron and a brief autobiographical account of her experiences and impressions as an opera singer, and it [illegible] be presented to everyone in the Tuesday evening audience. It is [illegible] that Miss Le Baron will make a speech of thanks [illegible] being a Bostonian herself, there is no doubt [illegible] greeting.

• • • • • •

I NOTE that [illegible] Hansel is to again give a public performance by the pupils of his dramatic school. It is to be of "Captain Swift," and takes place at the [illegible] Theatre on the afternoon of December 6. Haddon Chambers wrote the play, which had a year's run in London and New York. [illegible] the fact that quite a number of Mr. Hansel's pupils are now "on the road" with successful companies and "making good."

• • • • • •

IT will seem good to see jolly Hattie Williams back again. The engagement of "The Little Cherub," which begins to-morrow night at the Hollis, will, I understand, develop many surprises of a most agreeable nature. Since [illegible] twenty merry associates played their memorable engagement at the [illegible] Theatre last Spring new songs and new features have been [illegible] course, nothing can ever supplant the "Experience" song [illegible] theatregoers, but Miss Williams has a new "coon" song [illegible] that promises to make a sensation. She now gives [illegible] of Maude Adams, Ethel Barrymore, William [illegible] Montgomery and Stone and Rose Stahl. She calls these imitations [illegible] she began them in fun, but they proved to be [illegible] the charming young woman unexpectedly added a big [illegible] There are untold possibilities of fun, too, in a burlesque on the "Merry Widow" waltz by Miss Williams and that inimitable English comedian James Blakeley. I hope Mr. Blakeley is still singing about those fascinating "Little Tiddlers on the Line."

• • • • • •

MRS. CAMPBELL'S representative announces that she is anxious to secure the lease of a playhouse in New York beginning next season, and that her intention is to play twenty weeks of the dramatic season [illegible] remainder for her London and English provincial tours. There is every likelihood that the theatre will be known as Mrs. Campbell's Theatre. It is [illegible] to be definitely settled that in the event of Mrs. Campbell becoming established in New York she will play an annual Boston engagement, reproducing here the successes of her New York playhouse.

• • • • • •

MY sympathies are extended to dainty Katie Rooney, who was obliged to cancel part of her engagement at the Orpheum last week, owing to the sudden death of her grandmother in Baltimore. It is one of the hardships [illegible] to make people laugh while tucked away in the [illegible] is a telegram announcing the death of some [illegible] heart is as heavy as lead. This was Miss Rooney's experience [illegible] Thursday night.

• • • • • •

LINDSAY MORISON, manager of the Boston Theatre, has, I understand, [illegible] contracts with Wilson Melrose, Eleanor Gordon and other principals of his stock company for next season, so that playgoers may be sure of seeing dramas on the Boston's stage every week for the next year or more. The Boston is to be kept open all Summer with big productions, and the future is very bright for the company.

• • • • • •

I LEARN that it is very probable that the new theatre to be built by Winthrop Ames on his recently acquired property in Park square may be ready for occupancy next season. It is not Mr. Ames's plan, I understand, to establish any "new theatre" idea, but to organize a stock company to produce only high-class dramas. Incidentally, it would not be surprising if there were some radical changes at the Castle Square next season.

Globe Theatre

Digby Bell, as Uncle Nat in James A. Herne's great home play, "Shore Acres," comes to the Globe for two weeks, starting with to-morrow's matinee, under the Shubert direction. The American stage to-day can produce no actor better suited by temperament and personality to adequately portray the part of Uncle Nat than Digby Bell. "Shore Acres" is essentially an American play, redolent of the soil, and appeals strongly to those who admire and respect the rugged virtues. It has the charm of familiar things and its characters are not unlike those we have somewhere seen or met. It possesses the atmosphere of the home and hearth of New England. It is clean in its dialogue and innocent in its fun. It plays its part as a missionary in uplifting the drama to better things.

Much care has been shown in selecting the company in support of Mr. Bell. James T. Galloway, who has so long played part of the grass widower, Joel Gates, will be seen in his old role. The other principal parts will be taken by [illegible] Stowe, [illegible] Edwin August, Stephen Clarkson [illegible] There will be a special holiday matinee Thursday, Thanksgiving Day.

Tremont Theatre

Kaw & Erlanger's vaudeville festival will be continued at the Tremont with no diminution in the cost or the excellence of the bills presented from week to week. [illegible] the German comedian, [illegible] an artist to his fingers' tips [illegible] will present a condensation of his great success [illegible] Others in the bill will be Vasco, "The Mad Musician"; the famous Okabe family of Japanese [illegible] "Military Maid"; [illegible] Brothers [illegible] comedian; [illegible] and their revolving globe; Will Rogers, the "King of the Lariat"; Alexander and Bertie in an aerial novelty act, and a new selection of animated pictures. There are matinees every day.

Orpheum Theatre

Appearing in the most successful one-act comedy written in many years, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew will be at the Orpheum this week in [illegible] It is one of those [illegible] hits that occur once in a great while.

Another comedy will be by [illegible] dogs [illegible] stage setting [illegible] the houses and streets [illegible] and the dogs [illegible] all sorts of surprising [illegible] Bailey will be seen for the last time prior to their starring [illegible] The musical feature will be [illegible] Grand Opera [illegible] version of "Il Trovatore." [illegible] Hayes and Sabel Johnson in robust [illegible] Tom Moore, [illegible] and Paul and the kinetograph.

Majestic Theatre

Boston playgoers have but a fleeting chance to enjoy the Belasco production of "The Rose of the Rancho" at the Majestic. The present week will be marked [illegible] special matinee on Thursday, Thanksgiving Day, [illegible] accommodate those who [illegible] the curtain [illegible] 2.30 instead of the usual hour. The regular matinees occur Wednesday and Saturday at 2 o'clock. At the evening performances the curtain is raised promptly [illegible] "The Rose of the Rancho" as well the [illegible] its merits as a play and the quality of the acting by the [illegible] cast. This cast includes [illegible] Charles [illegible] A. Hamilton [illegible] Frank Losee, Grace Gaylor Clark, [illegible]

Colonial Theatre

The fourth week of the extraordinarily successful engagement of Montgomery and Stone in Charles Dillingham's production of "The Red Mill" starts to-morrow night at the Colonial Theatre. This piece has proved [illegible] most potent musical attraction that the [illegible] has ever had. In fact, in the past three weeks it has broken [illegible] be seen in any city of New [illegible] Immediately after [illegible] the entire [illegible] New York and [illegible] for the remainder [illegible] There will be a special matinee Thanksgiving Day.

Park Theatre

If there be any doubt in the minds of [illegible] as to the popularity of [illegible] the new [illegible] "The Hypocrites" [illegible] for a week [illegible] English playwright [illegible] powerful moral [illegible] Henry Arthur Jones took for his [illegible] which is as old as drama itself [illegible] he has so powerfully [illegible] and he has [illegible] story that it is [illegible] pregnant force. [illegible] Wednesday [illegible] Thanksgiving [illegible] will be given.

Lyceum Theatre

At the opening of Fred Irwin's New Majesties [illegible] a new first part and [illegible] Bits and the Kneippe [illegible] A strong vaudeville [illegible] diversion of burlesque.

Palace Theatre

Another of Bob Manchester's splendid organizations, his Vanity Fair Extravaganza, will be at the Palace this week. Two [illegible] and [illegible] James [illegible] will be a [illegible] by the Palace company.

Women Avoid Operations

When a woman suffering from female trouble is told that an operation is necessary, it, of course, frightens her.

The very thought of the hospital, the operating table and the knife strikes terror to her heart.

It is quite true that these troubles may reach a stage where an operation is the only resource, but a great many women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after an operation has been decided upon as the only cure. The strongest and most grateful statements possible to make come from women who by taking made from native roots and herbs, have escaped serious operations, as evidenced by Miss Rose Moore's case of [illegible] N.Y. She writes:—

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured me of the very worst form of female trouble, and I wish to express to you my sincerest gratitude. I suffered [illegible] years so that I was unable to attend to my duties and was a burden to my family. I doctored and doctored without any [illegible] objecting to an operation which I was advised to undergo. I [illegible] to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it cured me of the terrible trouble and I am now in better health than I have been for many years."

This and other such cases should encourage every woman to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before she submits to an operation.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised.

FRANCES STARR HAS MADE GOOD EARLY PROPHECY.

Year as Belasco Star Has Made No Change in Her Girlish Charm.

By Ernest L. Waitt.

WHEN Frances Starr was a member of the Castle Square Stock Company a very few years ago she showed rare promise. Patrons of the house grew to love her for her winsomeness, her girlish grace and her unusual talents as an ingenue.

I kept a diary at that time, and on looking over its pages I find this note:

"There is a little girl here named Frances Starr. She is evidently very talented and is beautiful to look at. She isn't bigger than a pinch of salt, but how she can act! She is sure to be heard from later. I must watch her progress. It will be interesting."

To-day Frances Starr is a Belasco star—heralded from coast to coast as the most promising protege of that wizard of the stage, that great poet of dramatic expression. She is back in Boston at the head of a great company, in one of Belasco's greatest plays.

Belasco Star Who Still Wears the Same Size Hat

FRANCES STARR IN "THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO" AT THE MAJESTIC

Famous in a Night.

A year ago, when "The Rose of the Rancho" was first performed here, and Miss Starr became famous in a night, I met her at Mr. Belasco's dinner in her [illegible]. She was [illegible] ... [illegible] which she tossed [illegible] the table, named [illegible] and planted them. Mine is still flourishing.

Has a year of stardom caused a change? Is she less naive? Is she less spontaneous in [illegible]? In other words, has she got the "big head"? [illegible] made [illegible] at the Tremont [illegible] with a tear [illegible] in her eyes and [illegible] a trace of embarrassment [illegible].

"Tears [illegible] of a Belasco star, and what do you think caused them?

"I have been standing here, looking down at the poor unfortunates who are being carried into the police station. They have [illegible] a poor old woman in there. It seems as though her only crime could be that of poverty. A few minutes ago they took a large man in. He was awfully ragged. He didn't seem intoxicated. [illegible] And it made the tears come into my eyes."

Surely [illegible] star had lost none of her [illegible] affection. She had not become hardened to the sufferings of others.

Tries to Keep Happy.

"Mr. Belasco tries so hard to keep me happy," she said, "that I don't suppose I ought to watch such things, but I cannot help it. Mr. Belasco's constant plea to me is to keep happy and well. Only to-day he sent me a telegram. It was so unexpected, [illegible]. He said he was pleased with the Boston results and with my work and he closed it with the words, 'keep happy and well.'

"He is always doing these unexpected things, always [illegible] so gentle and [illegible]. He is [illegible] like a dear, kind father and all [illegible] worship him.

"How do I like being a star? Well, to tell the truth, I don't have time to think about it. I am trying so hard to be worthy of the place [illegible] feel, down in my own heart, you know, that I am worthy of it, that I don't have time to realize anything except that I want to 'make good,' as they say.

"I feel that after all his kindnesses to [illegible] the best I can do is to make myself worthy, and I study, study [illegible] day and try to see [illegible]. I never think of myself as [illegible] just the wagon that is hitched [illegible], that is all."

Miss Starr was gowned in a dainty costume of soft gray material. She talked with the same naivete that characterized her a year ago, on the night of her stellar debut.

She was still the same winsome, delightful, girlish creature—she had still the same feelings of wide-eyed wonder at the honors showered upon her that were so marked at the Belasco-Starr dinner a year ago.

So I am going to make a new note on the page of that diary, and say—"Frances Starr is now a star, a very bright one, and she hasn't got the 'big head' over it. She possesses the invaluable power to make people love her."

She was going to the Grand Opera House to see [illegible] of "Since Nellie Went Away." [illegible] had forwarded the tickets [illegible] from Philadelphia.

Bills of the Week at Local Theatres

Grand Opera House

One car for the horses, one for the scenery, one for baggage and a coach for the company gives some idea of the magnitude of Miss Lillian Mortimer's great play "Bunco in Arizona," which appears at the Grand Opera House this week, with two performances on Thanksgiving Day. The play is a comedy-drama of incidents in the great Southwest. Indians, direct from their reservation, and cowboys with their bronchos from the ranch, with an A1 dramatic cast, headed by Lillian Mortimer, the authoress, as "[illegible]," all go to make the play an assured success. The four scenes depict a [illegible], with a typical Western saloon, showing a gold hunt, a mine, with [illegible] working machinery, a mountain pass with forest trees and an Indian camp with its tepees, and the final scene is a ranchero's home with its true Western hospitality. Matinees will be given on Tuesday, Thursday (Thanksgiving Day) and Saturday.

Columbia Theatre

Miner's "Dreamland" burlesquers will be at the Columbia this week, with Dave Marion leading in "Dreamland." So great has been the [illegible] made by this company this season that many critics go so far as to state that it is superior to the famous "Wine, Women and Song" production. "Newport" is the title of the burlesque and the characters introduced are taken from all walks of life, from the blueblood aristocrat to the lowly laborer. In the company are such favorites as Harry Fox, Will Lawrence, George H. Pearce, Fred Barnes, Frank B. Bache, the three Hanlons, Agnes Behler, Adelaide L. [illegible], the Earle sisters and [illegible] of twenty [illegible] women with [illegible] voices [illegible]. John [illegible] Swede [illegible] Lena [illegible]. Friday night will [illegible] the gala occasion of the week when the [illegible] ambitious amateurs will dispense their fun.

Bowdoin Square Theatre

A magnificent revival of the celebrated melodrama, "Daniel Boone," will be produced by the stock company. The play tells of many thrilling episodes in the life of Daniel Boone during the early days in the Blue Grass State. In the course of events Boone's cabin is destroyed by fire and the Indians [illegible] his daughter. Daniel and his [illegible] are held captives until they are rescued after a fierce fight in which Boone [illegible] Indian [illegible] Blackfish. It will [illegible] to introduce two new faces, that of [illegible] Kent, formerly associated with another [illegible] stock company, and Charles [illegible], who has been appearing in New York. The title role will be played by Clayton Legge and the role of Sol, the [illegible]maker, by Tommy Shearer.

Howard Athenaeum

Reilly and Woods' famous burlesquers, headed by that king of comedians, Pat Reilly, will offer a round of real fun in two skits, "Reilly in Egypt" and "Reilly in Politics." Both of these are built for fun purposes only. In the vaudeville [illegible] will be features the [illegible] singer, Jeannette [illegible], followed by George B. Alexander, the king of all hobos. Then comes the famous Holmen Bros. in a bar novelty, Cunningham and Fawcett, singers and dancers, [illegible] to head [illegible]. Watson and [illegible], copper colored comedians, [illegible] and [illegible] Lorraine, mystery performers, John P. Creed, physical culture [illegible], Frederick [illegible] and [illegible] by the entertaining Howard-scope.

Austin & Stone's Museum

Free seats in the theatre auditorium is the new order of things at Austin & Stone's, and it enables one after seeing the big museum show to enjoy the theatre performance also, all for ten cents. Among this week's features are Libbera, with one head and two bodies, and Lentini, the man with three legs. Others are Mon[illegible] and Russell, physical perfect[illegible], Braddon and Gibson, cowgirl experts with rifle and lariat, H. A. Hoppe, with a mystic ball, DeBonnaire and his [illegible]-headed family, Trixie and her snakes, and the monster python. In the theatre are "that colored quartet," Lillian Mortha [illegible], [illegible] Terrell, chansonette; Morton and Gray, in musical comedy; Kitty Hoffman, pictured melodies, and the Meadows Comedy Company.

First Colonial Matinee

Playgoers recall with special interest the Colonial Matinees, which Clayton D. Gilbert has given at that house, of masterpieces of the Gaelic stage and also the [illegible] French school of realism. He has [illegible] for the afternoon of December [illegible] of the Seen and [illegible], which will include "Shadow of Night," by Captain Robert Marshall; "The [illegible]," a play based on a story by Mary E. Wilkins-Freeman, and Edmond Rostand's "Les Romanesques." This will be given in its complete form, three acts, and will be the adaptation made for the London stage by Miss Dudu Fletcher (George Fleming), and called "The Fantasticks." Among those who will have parts are Miss Marion Peabody, Miss Barbara Stuart, Dr. L. B. [illegible], Theodore F. Koch and Clinton Andrew Preston.

ADELE ROWLAND IS BACK TO SCENE OF HER EXPLOITS.

KICKS FOOTBALL NOW

ADELE ROWLAND as "THE LITTLE CHERUB" AT THE HOLLIS

A FEW months ago Adele Rowland was distributing gold eagles and half dollars within Greater Boston.

On Monday Miss Rowland will distribute laughs from the stage of the Hollis.

As laughter produces health and as health is money, the transition is not such a strange one. From the "Red Dollar Sign Girl" of the Boston Sunday American to Lady [illegible] Congreve in "The Little Cherub" may seem a strange jump, but there is nothing [illegible] about it.

[illegible] Adele Rowland [illegible] part of the [illegible] Paragon Park [illegible] golden [illegible] the name of the American she played her role well, as might be expected from so clever an actress, and her experiences [illegible] as she told it so graphically in the American a few days after [illegible] crowded [illegible]

She was then in the cast of "The Hurdy Gurdy Girl," and in view [illegible] her beautiful face was familiar [illegible] theatregoers and that her [illegible] disguised, had been [illegible] the American as a guide to [illegible] It is evident that she must be [illegible] herself a consummate actress off the stage as well as on in order to escape detection so long when she walked around [illegible] crowds of anxious watchers and escape detection for hours.

As one of the pretty daughters in "The Little Cherub" Miss Rowland has had to add one more to her many [illegible] accomplishments, namely the art of kicking a football [illegible] between the verses of the song "I Should So Love to Be a Boy." Kicking football is not an easy accomplishment, especially when one is hampered by skirts and high heeled shoes, but Miss Rowland started in to be a "kicker" with the same vim and energy that marked her entrance into the exclusive class of gold distributors.

Under the tutelage of Miss Hattie Williams, who is a first-class athlete, Miss Rowland learned all the tricks of the gridiron with remarkable rapidity and to-day holds the championship badge which Miss Williams founded several months ago and which has to be contested for every few weeks.

But of course no young woman can enter the ranks of "The Little Cherub" just because she has athletic ability. She must be handsome, graceful, sing well and dance daintily. Hence Miss Rowland was not lightly chosen for the role. She was one of the prettiest members in the play, "Pierrot and Pierrette." So the "Red Dollar Sign Girl" is reaping her golden reward now just as she bestowed gold before.

Tabloid Tales They Tell of Thespians.

Few people outside of the theatrical profession realize how seldom the players are really able to spend their holidays with their own people. Illustrative of this is the fact that Miss Trixie Jennery, who comes to the Hollis Street Theatre with Hattie Williams in "The Little Cherub," will spend her first Thanksgiving at home in six years. In fact, she has never had this home holiday since she went on the stage.

Marie Lloyd, the most popular English music hall favorite of the present day, will be at Keith's next week. "The Boys in Blue," the best military act yet presented in vaudeville, is also one of the features.

• • •

At the Boston Theatre for the week beginning Monday, Dec. 2, the attraction will be the very popular American drama by Joseph Arthur, "Blue Jeans."

• • •

Following the run of "Rob Roy" at the Castle Square Theatre, which will continue a week and a half, Verdi's grand opera will be produced on Thursday evening, Dec. 5, for a series of nine performances through the Wednesday evening of the next week. At the same time Madame Helene Noldi and Signor Alberti will make their first appearance as permanent members of the opera company.

• • •

"Kidnapped for Revenge," by Charles E. Blaney, with Will H. Vedder as its star, will be next week's attraction at the Grand Opera House. The story of the play is intensely told and deals with kidnappers of the great city of New York and some of the problems of city life. Its heart interest is strong and convincing.

• • •

One of the novelties of "The Little Cherub," which begins a two weeks' engagement at the Hollis on Monday, is a burlesque on the "Merry Widow" waltz by Hattie Williams and James Blakeley.

• • •

Miss Alice Neilson, popular idol of the American public and prima donna soprano of the San Carlo Grand Opera Company, will be heard in a new role during the forthcoming engagement of the company in the city, when she will sing Lady Harriet in "Martha."

• • •

Bob Manchester, whose Vanity Fair Burlesquers play at the Palace Theatre this week, has brought out many of the most popular comedy stars of the stage to-day. During his experience of over a quarter of a century in catering to the amusement public he has discovered and introduced to the stage many performers who in after years became famous.

• • •

Colonel Frank P. Stone has gone over to New York to meet one of his foreign agents, who has contracts for several startling sensational novelties that will shortly appear. [illegible] in the list are a famous Royal [illegible] troupe, their first appearance in America, a troupe of dusky Amazonian beauties, an Esquimaux family, a troupe of wild Cossacks and four baby [illegible] camels.

• • •

Susanne Adams, Mme. Baldini, Ida Fuller, La Esmeralda, Mme. Hermann and many others booked for early appearances at the Tremont Theatre would seem to indicate that the rumored return of this house to the ranks of legitimate was some ways off at least.

• • •

After David Belasco has well launched the new play, "The Warrens of Virginia," which had its trial in Philadelphia last week preparatory to a run at the Belasco Theatre, New York, the eminent dramatist [illegible] will come to Boston for a few days of relaxation and witness Miss Frances Starr's performance of "The Rose of the Rancho" at the Majestic Theatre.

• • •

Lillian Russell will never return to the operatic stage, she says. She has made such a great success as a comedienne that she need no longer fear any such a calamity as the loss of her voice. She can still sing as sweetly as ever, but she is even more entertaining playing parts than in singing roles. Joseph Brooks, under whose direction Miss Russell is touring, discovered that Miss Russell was a real comedienne and that all she wanted to put her at the head of the list was to get her good plays. "The Butterfly" was the first of them and "Wildfire" is even more entertaining. She will be seen at the Hollis Street Theatre in a fortnight.

• • •

Antoinette Le Brun, who is on this week's bill at the Orpheum, was "discovered" while prima donna in an Italian opera company on Grand street, New York. The "discoverer" was Colonel Henry W. Savage, who made her prima donna in his English grand opera company. Since her advent in vaudeville with the Le Brun Grand Opera Trio she has proved a tremendous success.

• • •

Nat C. Goodwin has been away from Boston for nearly two seasons, so that his boyhood friends will give him a rousing greeting when he returns to the Hollis Street Theatre next month with an entirely new play that has never been seen upon the Boston stage.

The Boston Belles will be at the Lyceum Theatre December 2, and Edgar Bixley, in "The Wanderer from Nowhere," will come with them.

• • •

When Richard Bennett played the reporter in "The Other Girl" it was generally stated that he had seen active work in a newspaper office on account of his careful portrayal of the character. Now that he is playing the curate-hero in "The Hypocrites," there are many who think that at one time he must have been in holy orders because he has all the ritualistic realism. As a matter of fact, this talented young actor comes from the middle West and was intended for commercial life, but he preferred the stage.

The character of Tr[illegible] has proved one of the greatest successes in Eleanor Gordon's repertoire in Western cities, and those who have seen and realized the wide [illegible] of her [illegible] are anticipating with great interest her appearance in it this week at the Boston Theatre.

It was a great disappointment for several of the members of the company in "The Red Mill" that the New York Horse Show had to be missed, and one enthusiastic girl in the boxes who went on the opening night and then telegraphed about [illegible] was given the reply that there was no occasion for her to return to Boston, as her place had been filled.

Society is looking anxiously forward to the special matinee, a group of "Plays of the Seen and Unseen," to be given at the Colonial Theatre Thursday, December 5, at 2 o'clock, under the direction of Mr. Clayton D. Gilbert. This is the third series of artistic and unusual plays to be presented by Mr. Gilbert and will not doubt prove as successful as the predecessors.

BETROTHALS LEAD SMART SET GOSSIP

Palfrey-Ayer Announcement Among the Most Important During the Past Week.

Engagements have been the chief topic of interest in the smart world the past week, that of Miss Hannah Palfrey of the Vincent Club to James B. Ayer, Jr., being most important. Miss Palfrey, who is a petite brunette, is the daughter of Mrs. John C. Palfrey of Beacon street, and a sister of Dr. Francis Palfrey of the University, Athletic and other prominent clubs. Each year since her debut she has taken a leading part in the Vincent show, and has become more or less noted for her artistic dancing.

Mr. Ayer is the son of Dr. James B. Ayer of Beacon street and a graduate of Harvard in the class of '03. He is a brother of Miss Mary Ayer, who graduated from Bryn Mawr; Nathaniel F. Ayer and Miss Elizabeth Ayer, who has not yet been presented. Though no date has been set for the wedding it is thought that it will take place next June.

Announcement has been made from Washington of the engagement of Miss Laura Carlisle, youngest daughter of Mrs. William Carlisle and a granddaughter of the Hon. John G. Carlisle, former Secretary of the Treasury, to Lewis Sherman Pitkin of Boston. Miss Carlisle was maid of honor at the marriage of her sister, Jane, to F. Lothrop Allen of New York last week at the Carlisle home on K street, and it was she who drew the slice of wedding cake containing the gold ring. Mr. Pitkin was a guest at the wedding and was present when his future bride drew the ring.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Finn of Clinton Road, Brookline, have announced the engagement of their daughter Christine to William Ingalls, of New York, Technology '07. Miss Finn is a rarely pretty and talented girl and has spent much of her life in travel abroad.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Miss Abby White, daughter of Horace White, to John Mead Howells, Harvard '91, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Dean Howells.

Over $50 was realized.

Gay Dinners to Summon Smart Set Guests to Transformed Country Homes.

By a Society Woman.

IN the social atmosphere the Thanksgiving spirit is pleasingly pervasive and elaborate plans for the gayest of gatherings are under way. Country homes are being merrily transformed into settings for such scenes of luxury and splendor as would amaze the simple forefathers who originated the day for thanksgiving and prayer.

One of the jolliest house parties during the holiday period will be that which Mrs. Charles E. Inches of Beacon street will give at her fine country estate in Medfield. The guests will include the Harvard classmates of Henderson Inches, who is on the 'varsity team, and a number of the younger girls in society.

Dinner for Fifty at Country Home

Mrs. David Baker will entertain a family house party of over fifty at her country house in Wickford, R. I. Most of the guests, including Mr. and Mrs. C. H. W. Foster, their daughters, Hilda and Catherine, and their two young sons, Charles and Reginald; the Richard and John Cobbs and the William H. Gardiners, will go on a private car from Boston.

Mrs. Baker, who is among the most prominent hostesses in society and entertains most lavishly, is the daughter of the late John W. Chandler of Brookline. Miss Anita Baker, her daughter, was one of the prettiest girls entertained by the Crown Prince of Sweden at the luncheon on his yacht last Summer.

Norfolk Hunt Club Thanksgiving Meet

The Norfolk Hunt Club, Henry G. Vaughan master, will hold a Thanksgiving meet at Medway in the morning which is to be followed by a luncheon and the dismemberment of the Thanksgiving turkey. The event promises to be a lively as well as a gorgeous one. All the hunters will wear their pink coats, which always make such an interesting foil for the handsomely gowned women.

Among the members of the hunt who will attend are Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Walden Hale, William Cameron Forbes, Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Minot, Randolph C. Grew, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick S. Converse, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. McQuillen, Mr. and Mrs. Lansley Loring, and, in fact, nearly every member.

Announce Two Interesting Betrothals

The engagement season is surely at its height in the Hub, for hardly a day passes that some interesting betrothal is not announced. Two of the most interesting of the late week is that of Ray Atherton of this city, a Harvard '05 man, to Miss Marion Averill Clark of New York, and that of Elizabeth Lowell Clark, daughter of Eliot Channing Clark, to Charles Eliot Ware of Newbury street.

In announcing his engagement Mr. Atherton is following closely the example set by his older brother, George Edward Atherton, now of Philadelphia, who announced his engagement about two months ago. Mr. Atherton is a son of Mrs. George E. Atherton of Marlboro street and a brother of Mrs. John S. Lawrence (Emma Atherton), a bud of last Winter, who was the first and is yet the only one of the debutantes to don a bridal veil.

Miss Clark is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Crawford Clark of No. 1027 Fifth avenue, New York, and is well known in the city's most exclusive circles.

Miss Elizabeth Clark, who has been deluged with flowers and felicitations since announcing her engagement to Mr. Ware, is a member of the smart Vincent Club coterie of younger girls, and is as charming as she is pretty. She is the youngest of a family of three girls, her sisters being the Misses Susan and Anna Clark. Mr. Ware is a Harvard '06 man.

EXODUS OF SMART MATRONS TO WASHINGTON PRESAGES QUIET WINTER IN BOSTON

Hub's Leading Hostesses to Be Among Foremost Entertainers of Diplomatic Set.

"If this exodus of our leading hostesses to Washington keeps up, the Winter in Boston, so far as society is concerned, will indeed be 'flat, stale and unprofitable.' Why it's really almost alarming to see so many of our smartest matrons going over there each year. This, coupled with the growing tendency to winter abroad, is depleting our ranks to such an extent that very few, who would otherwise prefer remaining at home, care to do so under existing conditions. That is the reason that Boston society folk are becoming known as such wanderers."

So says a dashing young matron of the exclusive set, who is herself intending to desert ranks and sail for Europe in December.

Among the Boston matrons who will be among the foremost entertainers at the Capitol this season are that fascinating young widow, Mrs. George Nickerson, Mrs. Lars Anderson, Mrs. Edward Brandegee, Mrs. Francis Crowninshield, Mrs. George von L. Meyer and Mrs. Robert Treat Paine, Jr.

Mrs. Nickerson, who is the wealthiest of Boston's young widows and who since her husband's death some three or four years ago has spent the greater part of her time in Europe, will occupy the Nathaniel Simpkins mansion on Connecticut avenue. In addition to her great wealth Mrs. Nickerson is extremely pretty, still young and has laid aside her mourning.

Mrs. Anderson, chief heiress of the veteran sea merchant, Commodore Weld of Boston, will reign again this season in her Washington home, which is considered the most sumptuous private residence in the city. The Anderson mansion, which is on the plan of a Florentine palace, is of cream stone and white marble trimmings, with pillared terraces, carved Parisian staircases and Italian roof garden, and is said to have cost over two million. But as Mrs. Anderson has over $20,000,000 to spend the cost means little to her. Its furnishings are sumptuous and are exact reproductions of a Florentine feudal castle. Mrs. Anderson, who retains her girlish good looks and whose toilettes are always beautiful, has given some of the most lavish entertainments in Washington.

Mr. Anderson is a first cousin of Nicholas Longworth and was one of the ushers at his wedding to Miss Roosevelt. The Andersons gave the first ball in their gorgeous salon last Winter in honor of the young couple. Mrs. Anderson is a cousin of Mrs. Brandegee, who has spent so many Winters in Washington and who is now negotiating for a handsome residence near that of the Andersons.

Mrs. Crowninshield, who is one of Boston's best-known philanthropists, will preside over the home of her millionaire father, Senator DuPont. Mrs. Norman, who was one of the three famous Palfrey girls, all noted for their good looks and popularity, is now looked upon as a leader in the smart affairs of Washington, where she owns one of the handsomest residences on Massachusetts avenue.

Mrs. Meyer, wife of the postmaster-general, of course takes her place among the cabinet ladies. Mrs. Meyer and her daughters spent Winter before last and part of last Winter in Boston, when Mrs. Meyer's social tact and her brilliant dinners, distinguished for their menus and after-dinner entertainment, were the talk of the exclusive set in which she moved.

Among other of Boston's matrons who will spend much of the season in Washington are Mrs. Bayard Thayer and Mrs. Horatio Nelson Slater.

Debutantes Now Triumph in Smart Set

Banquets, Receptions and Teas Follow in Most Bewildering Succession.

The debutantes are having their innings just now, and things in the "bud" world are and will continue to be extremely lively for the coming two or three months. There is a shower of invitations for debutante balls, banquets, receptions, teas and [illegible] that follow each other in a bewildering succession.

One of the prettiest of the bud functions was the dinner dance given by Mr. and Mrs. Samuel D. Warren Friday night in honor of their vivacious bud daughter, Katharine, one of the most interesting as well as most accomplished girls of the set. The dance was given at the polo clubhouse in Dedham, which was very prettily decorated and made a handsome setting for the festivities. All of Miss Warren's friends were present to assist in her launching, which proved a distinct success.

* * *

The coming week Mrs. Charles E. Inches of Beacon street will give a dance at her Medfield estate, "Eden Adams," for the debutantes.

* * *

Monday evening Mrs. Albert W. Nickerson is giving a dinner dance at her Dedham estate to introduce her daughter Ruth.

* * *

Friday evening, December 6, is the date Mrs. Isadore P. Burgess has chosen for the large ball which she is to give for Miss Helen Farnsworth, the debutante daughter of the William Farnsworths' at the Somerset. This will be the first of the season's large affairs and the buds are busy with preparations.

Means, at the Somerset; the three subscription dances at the Somerset, the ball which Mrs. [illegible] will give at the Somerset for her granddaughter, Miriam Shaw, and the dance which Mrs. J. Randolph Coolidge will give at her Beacon street house, for her granddaughter, Miss Julia Coolidge.

* * *

The John E. Thayers have issued invitations for a Somerset ball January 3, in honor of their daughters, the Misses Evelyn and Nora Thayer, for whom Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer gave a brilliant dinner-dance at her Lancaster estate last Friday.

* * *

Mrs. Benjamin P. Cheney and Miss Elizabeth Cheney have opened their Marlboro street home, after several weeks spent at their Peterboro estate, "The Needles." The Cheneys spent the Summer in Europe.

* * *

Mrs. Wirt Dexter, who has spent the greater part of the Summer at her fine new estate at Marion, where she has been entertaining her daughter, Mrs. Stanley McCormick, returned to her Commonwealth avenue house on Thursday. On account of Mr. McCormick's health here Mrs. McCormick will spend the greater part of the Winter at Marion.

* * *

Among those sailing for Europe the past week were J. Hampden Robb and Miss Cornelia V. Robb, who will spend the Winter in foreign travel.

* * *

Mrs. Alexander Martin, who has just returned from her country place in Barre to her Beacon street home, is planning to sail for Europe early in the new year.

* * *

Mrs. Eugene H. Clapp of Beacon street and her daughters are sailing for Europe the coming week. They will spend the Winter in Algiers.

Among their guests were Miss Elizabeth Potter and her fiance, Frank Lyon Polk, of the Knickerbocker Club, New York, Yale '94, and Mr. and Mrs. Antonio Yznaga Stewart (Susan Sturgis), who came on from Philadelphia by special car.

CHAPTER XI.

Copyright, 1907, by American Journal Examiner

"No, [illegible] don't say anything more, I've thought it all out; my [illegible] now, I must go." Elizabeth laid her hand on her father's shoulder, and [illegible] from the great desk at [illegible] in his private office, he [illegible]

"[illegible] of yours, Bess," he began, drawing down the lid of his desk.

"Yes, I know, but I can't help it."

"How did you decide at last to go?" asked Ward, as they walked rapidly along in the crowded street.

"Well, [illegible] tortured me—I couldn't decide. [illegible] so difficult, every one [illegible] Mr. Eades, [illegible] reason, and he [illegible] impossible. But [illegible]

"[illegible] at this [illegible] proprieties [illegible] code had [illegible] wear, the [illegible] you know. And [illegible] irony [illegible]

"[illegible] how where [illegible] is?" Elizabeth asked.

"[illegible] yes, I was there once."

"[illegible] that boy of mine was arrested—Gusta."

"Yes, I remember."

Even Sympathy

"I wonder," he said after a pause, and he put again the question he seemed to fear, "whatever became of him?"

She had [illegible] of that day at the [illegible], she wondered if she [illegible] but she heard him sigh, [illegible]

[illegible] as if she had been [illegible]

At the [illegible] station they encountered [illegible] Ward evidently recognized him as a man of affairs [illegible] touching his helmet [illegible] for the realness [illegible] its privileges and [illegible]

[illegible] Ward was [illegible] difficult [illegible] delicate recognition of the patronage [illegible] saw, or thought [illegible] proper to see, in this visit, and he even expressed a sympathy [illegible] herself.

"[illegible] came, Mr. Ward," he said. "We had to [illegible] the poor girl [illegible]

[illegible] them up two broad flights of stairs and down a long hall, where, at his step, a matron appeared with a bunch of keys hanging at her white apron.

[illegible] both went with [illegible] of the [illegible] breast flutter with fear.

Sees Gusta

The sergeant stood in the hall, silent and unconcerned, and when the matron asked him if he would be present at the interview he shook his head in a way that indicated the occasion as one of those when [illegible] regulations may be suspended.

Ward, though he would have liked to go in, elected to remain outside with the sergeant, and as he did this he smiled [illegible] Elizabeth [illegible]

[illegible] opened with a whine, and [illegible] other end of the room, in the [illegible] that struggled through the dirty glass of the grated window, she saw [illegible] common wooden [illegible] yellow, her hat [illegible] gloved and folded in her lap, [illegible] instant she were to leave [illegible] had an air of [illegible]

"[illegible] ever since she came," [illegible] "she hasn't slep' a w[illegible]"

[illegible] glance swept the room which [illegible] walls lined higher [illegible] on one side [illegible] that looked as [illegible] though the dirty [illegible] persons had slept in [illegible]

[illegible] table with a [illegible] and crumbs [illegible] and he [illegible] edition of the Bible, [illegible] mockery the [illegible] to the room.

Gusta [illegible] looked up, made sure, and then suddenly rose and came toward her.

"[illegible] Miss Elizabeth," the girl said with a relief that compromised the [illegible] she had just expressed.

"I [illegible] as soon as I could, Gusta," said Elizabeth, [illegible] conjecture as to [illegible] girl knew [illegible] she had had in getting there [illegible]

Feminine Instinct

"Yes," said Gusta, "thank you, I"——

[illegible] blushed to her throat. They stood there in the middle of that common prison a sudden constraint lay on them. Elizabeth [illegible] of the difficulty of the whole [illegible] with a little [illegible] fear [illegible] a haunting [illegible] mistake some oversight [illegible] to say to Gusta now [illegible]

[illegible] There was not even a [illegible] She shuddered at the [illegible] with one of the mean articles of furniture, and stood rigidly in [illegible]

[illegible] was open and revealed a thin [illegible] with a lace yoke, and a chain of [illegible]

[illegible] of perfume enveloped her. The whole [illegible] was distasteful to Eliza[beth]. [illegible] It was something too much, and had [illegible] quality of tawdriness that [illegible] to confirm, until she saw in it [illegible] the first signs of moral disint[egration].

WHY SHOULD GIRLS DREAD BECOMING "OLD MAIDS"?

There's a Vast Difference Between the Old Maid of the Old Days and the Old Maid of Nowadays

FROM the hour that she is old enough to understand the term every girl has an unconcealed dread of [illegible] old maid.

[illegible] fear and [illegible]

[illegible] an old maid [illegible]

But that sort of old maid is out of date, my dears. [illegible] and no wonder, for no one [illegible] any interest [illegible] or beloved.

[illegible]

Woman's Best Career

I am a firm believer [illegible] happy matrimony, [illegible] the best of all careers for women, [illegible] for one reason or another all women cannot marry.

Some of them never meet the right man. Some of them prefer single blessedness. Perhaps there are not enough men to [illegible]

[illegible] rate, the fact remains that there [illegible] never [illegible]

[illegible] of to-[illegible]

[illegible] her hours of loneliness, [illegible] but she is determined to wrest what [illegible] out of life, and so, on the [illegible]

[illegible] most of you, my [illegible] marry and be happy [illegible]

Old Maid Worth While

The [illegible] woman I know is an old maid. [illegible] in a large city not far from New York. [illegible] is the most [illegible] and the most prominent woman in her native city.

Women consult her on all matters.

[illegible] time in going to [illegible]

[illegible] all the knowledge [illegible] to [illegible] keep your hearts [illegible]

[illegible] term "old maid" from your minds.

The more bright and lovable you make yourselves [illegible] will be in [illegible] life, whether married or single.

If you know any old maids, just cut [illegible] and see if [illegible] are not bright and cheerful [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] of old maid is a self-re[specting] [illegible] up to date woman, who [illegible] regard and respect of all who know her.

Expert Says Health and Happiness Are Real Beauty Secrets

DR. JOSIAH OLDFIELD, an eminent London physician, has written a remarkable article on beauty that is reproduced herewith. He declares that happiness and health make the real beauty

By Dr. Josiah Oldfield

YOU ask me who are the beautiful. I answer that they only are beautiful who are healthy and happy.

The longer I live and the more I see of beautiful women the more am I struck with the fact that underneath them all are traces of one or both of the two great factors—happiness and health—and that where both are combined you may get a beauty of the rarest type.

[illegible] a thing of tiny feet, [illegible] or a small waist [illegible] or a layer of powder [illegible]

Whole Duty of Woman

HEALTH is an essential of beauty—not the negative health, which is "not ill" to-day, but may demand smelling salts and a cup of strong tea and a day in bed to-morrow, but the positive [illegible] of vitality [illegible]

Every woman ought to be beautiful. It is a woman's duty to be beautiful, and [illegible] woman is a blot upon the landscape of life.

I have come to the conclusion that women who are ugly are so entirely through their own fault, and the fault is generally either laziness or selfishness.

Beauty, like a lot of good things, is the reward and crown of goodness and [illegible] and it is only given to those who work as well as [illegible]

Dyspepsia is the curse of beauty, and a [illegible] is the centre point of a [illegible]

I remember Lady Paget telling me once that her experience was that the most beautiful complexioned women were those who are [illegible]

My observations lead me to the same conclusion, but I have learned to add that in order to obtain a healthy skin over the [illegible] a woman should not only eat [illegible] should avoid wearing [illegible]

A [illegible] dietary, rain water to wash [illegible] undergarments, fresh air, [illegible] and sunshine will transform a woman's face so that the glimmer of the [illegible] will begin to peep into the [illegible] and the soft richness of the velvet peach will come into the skin.

Ugliness a Crime

IN my opinion so much beauty is within the reach of every woman who will work hard enough to secure it that ugly women should be banished from the land on the ground that they are either too lazy to try or too selfish to give up their hot teas and strong [illegible] and blood heat[ing] [illegible] dishes.

Happiness is a social essential. A woman should be beautiful to her maid and to her husband who see her at her worst, [illegible] else she is not beautiful.

A bad tempered, fretful woman soon creates [illegible] wrinkles and poses which are [illegible] and [illegible] gives way to her [illegible] is only for public eyes.

Pursuing an Ideal

A WOMAN grows old sooner than a man, because she frets over trifles, and every fret leaves its stab on her transient beauty.

If a woman wants to be beautiful let her constantly lay before herself some type of beauty which she thinks ideal—I [illegible] the Gibson Girl, which at the moment is every shopgirl's pose.

[illegible] sooner than most people think [illegible] plainness will become in [illegible] charm and the goddess of her ideal will [illegible] growing beauty out of her [illegible] ugliness, like the glorious butterfly out of the repulsive caterpillar.

IMMORTALITY by Ella Wheeler Wilcox

A MAN, who says he is "a common work[illegible], writes an uncommonly interesting letter regarding the [illegible] subject of immortality. He wants me to [illegible] him in a brief newspaper article the whole process of reasoning which has led me to believe in immortality.

The letter comes from Three Rivers, Mass., and gives no address; it would be a pleasure to send my correspondent some booklets or to direct him where to obtain books which might aid his own excellent reasoning powers on this most important subject with which we have to deal, the immortality of the spirit of man.

He asks:

"Where do I come from? Did I have a beginning? Will death end all?

"If life is eternal, as you, dear lady, assert, then I cannot have a beginning, but must have existed always. We have no recollection of our former existences; if we had we would not fear death as we do. All conscious beings fear death.

"I am growing old. Bodily I am, and always was, very weak. Of the world's riches I have none. I am alone. There is no one whom I can call my own. The language I have to speak is foreign to me. Yet I fear death and cling to this miserable life."

"Common Workman" is asking questions which have puzzled the philosophers of the world since the beginning of time. But to those who care to look carefully and patiently into the mass of evidence obtained there is proof absolute of the immortality of ALL CREATED THINGS. No mind has yet been great enough to conceive a period of time BEFORE THERE WAS A BEGINNING.

"Who made God?" is the question of every child, before which every parent and theologian pauses silent and abashed. It is useless to waste vitality in trying to think out the unthinkable.

The fact which confronts us is LIFE. We are here. The next fact is DEATH. We must all give up the body eventually.

My own studies into the why and wherefore of existence convince me that in the works of the very earliest seers and masters extant, THE VEDAS, lies all that can be known of creation.

All later Bibles are included in these remarkable works. This philosophy teaches that [illegible] THE GREAT CAUSE, which is SPIRIT, expresses itself for Him, and [illegible] in the form of a material universe.

The [illegible] begin with wholly spiritual beings, who gradually grow more material through [illegible] forgetfulness, as time passes, of their [illegible] origin. When the very depths of [illegible] have been reached, then there [illegible] some great cataclysm of nature, and [illegible] go back to the original [illegible] when nothing [illegible] but spirit.

The [illegible] of method, but there have been many, and there will be many more. Science is [illegible] proving the vast age of [illegible] discovering evidences of the [illegible] existence of vanished continents and [illegible].

[illegible] millions of years EACH SOUL ON EARTH HAS LIVED. We have [illegible] and forms, always progressing in some degree, however we may have deteriorated in others, always gaining a little, however many our losses, always getting back to first principles, even when wandering away into materialism.

It is possible that the "Common Workman" with the uncommon mind and the weak body and the lonely heart was a powerful ruler, with gross appetites and uncontrolled passions, in some prehistoric age. He slaughtered and tyrannized and conquered during his span of life, and cared little for the sorrow he caused in compelling others to toil for him. So he was sent back to earth to EARN HIS BREAD BY THE SWEAT OF HIS BROW, and to be [illegible] and to carry a weak body, which he made by his former gluttony, but while he is physically, financially and socially on a lower plane than he was of old, his MIND and heart have learned to think and feel and his spirit is becoming more visible through the clay.

When he comes to earth again he will have learned many lessons and will occupy a much nobler place in the world. That he does not recall his old life or lives is of no more account than the fact that you or I do not recall the day we learned the first letters of the alphabet.

WE KNOW THE ALPHABET. That is the important thing.

Meantime, between the different incarnations, we pass through many interesting and wonderful spiritual experiences, where we meet those who are and have been our [illegible] spiritual kin, and we renew old ties of love and friendship as do scholars who go home between college years. Many people live on earth to-day who DO remember old incarnations. Such a memory can be cultivated, but is not important to our growth or happiness. Only the results of those experiences are important.

I do not recollect the days when I [illegible] to master my [illegible] lesson. I do not even recollect the names of the teachers who were vainly trying to make me study these distasteful problems. But I have all my life, since reaching maturity, suffered inconvenience from my neglect in youth to conquer mathematics. Just exactly so we receive benefits or suffer penalties today from acts we committed in former, forgotten lives.

I might perhaps sit down and by great effort recall the special scenes and teachers associated with my childish delinquencies, but it would serve small purpose now. It would be much wiser for me to take up the [illegible] study of algebra or to devote my time to helping other younger scholars to realize the importance of such studies.

In the same way, it is less important for us to devote our mental powers to an effort in recollecting past incarnations than it is to use them in building a noble incarnation for the next return to this or some other planet. Personally I am convinced that I know the period and place of my last life on earth, and I understand the absolute JUSTICE which has ruled in making me suffer every painful experience and hardship on this earth which has fallen to my lot; they have been harvests of my own sowing. So, too, have I reaped happiness and pleasure from the good deeds I planted in a former life.

There is a beautiful and good woman of my acquaintance who has been subjected to the most astonishing series of domestic tragedies. Neglect and deceit and cruelty have been shown her in the most peculiar forms, and she has seemed to be driven by a lash of destiny into a life of seclusion from the world which her personal attractions and mental qualities fit her to adorn. To me the woman's former incarnation is as clearly pictured as the story in any book of history. Her whole deportment carries out the narrative. She suggests, despite her womanly charms, a dominating masculine personality. The psychic eye sees the one-time tyrant who broke the hearts of the women attracted by his power and magnetism, who wooed and won, and "laughed and rode away," like the knight in the old song, and to whom the word "Home" had no meaning and implied no obligation.

So here and now the law of karma sends the tyrant back a woman, longing for home and protection and love, and forced to learn by personal earthly experience just what the lack of those blessings means. Subdued, submissive and uncomplaining, making the best of her solitary life to-day, thanking God for her friends and health, this woman has learned the lesson set for her, and is making "good karma" for the future.

All the troubles which have come to the denizens of earth, during all the eons of time, have resulted from THEIR FORGETFULNESS OF THE DIVINE NATURE IN EVERY CREATED THING.

That is what is meant by all the stories of "A Fall of Man," which run through every old religion. We all started with the STARTER. We all originated with the ORIGINATOR. And only by losing sight of this fact have we "fallen." So soon as we become fully conscious of our divinity we are "saved," and unto "those who have that consciousness more shall be given."

And whatsoever they ask shall be given because they are asking only for their own inheritance: health, opulence, happiness and eternal life.

AS YE SOW, SO SHALL YE REAP. You are your own savior. From yourself only can salvation come.

THANKSGIVING TURKEYS LATE

WHAT DINNER MAY COST

Perhaps $3.50 May Be Enough, But if Your Family Is Large It's Different.

The festive turkey is enjoying longer life this year than in past Thanksgiving seasons. His appearance in the Boston market is being delayed. Market men expect late shipments and a consequent dropping of prices on the two days preceding Thanksgiving.

Varying reasons are given. Some say turkeys are scarce. That is always the market slogan about Thanksgiving time. Turkeys are always scarce—scarce for the poorer householders.

When it comes to a show down, however, there is always enough to go 'round—for those who have the price.

You Never Can Tell.

There isn't any real, actual evidence yet that the price will be any lower than it has been the past few years, when the Thanksgiving [illegible] has reached prices that make his boarding in safe deposit vaults almost a serious proposition instead of a newspaper joke.

One of the real reasons for the late arrival of turkeys seems to be the requirement of cash payments [illegible] credit to commission men and [illegible]. The [illegible] expect a [illegible] of turkeys to [illegible] upon Boston next Tuesday or Wednesday. Some of them declare that the [illegible] be even [illegible] than ever.

Here are the prices quoted by one market man for Thanksgiving dinner:

What Your Dinner May Cost.

Turkey	[illegible] a pound
Chickens	[illegible] a pound
Cranberries	[illegible] a quart
Yellow turnips	[illegible] a peck
Sweet potatoes	[illegible] a pound
Squash	[illegible] cents a pound
Celery	[illegible] cents a bunch
English plum pudding	[illegible] a pound
Fresh nuts (mixed)	17 to 18 cents a pound
Oranges	[illegible] to 75 cents a dozen
Dates	[illegible]
Layer figs	[illegible] cents a pound
[illegible] figs	[illegible] cents a pound
Cheese	[illegible] cents a pound
[illegible]	[illegible] a quart
Sherry [illegible]	[illegible] a pint

$3.50 May Be Enough.

Figuring at [illegible] prices from this table, one [illegible] a good Thanksgiving dinner enough for three or four [illegible] several [illegible] that it [illegible] dinner in its [illegible].

SERVANT GIRLS OF THE RICH LOSE WORK AS PANIC RESULT

Hundreds of Domestics Discharged in Greater Boston Because of Money Scarcity.

Hundreds of servant girls have been thrown out of work in Boston and vicinity [illegible] money [illegible] which [illegible] retrenchment of expenses [illegible] wealthy.

A [illegible] have been cut down [illegible] per cent and in many cases [illegible] have been discharged.

As a result the employment bureaus are flooded with [illegible] of girl applicants for positions. A [illegible] month ago it was almost impossible [illegible] a [illegible] at any price.

The wages of domestics of all kinds have [illegible] per cent [illegible].

[illegible] household [illegible] of maids [illegible] domestic [illegible] out of work [illegible] factories in this State [illegible] last month, and these [illegible] to seek work as domestics.

Big Army of Unemployed.

"Conditions are [illegible]," said Superintendent [illegible] State Free Employment Bureau [illegible] Sunday American reporter last [illegible]. [illegible] there are [illegible] and I trace this directly to the present financial conditions. Since [illegible] factories throughout New England were forced to shut down there have been [illegible] in the army of unemployed.

"Until a few weeks ago we had more applications [illegible] could possibly fill. Now we [illegible] half enough [illegible] domestic work [illegible] the same in our [illegible] last week [illegible] throw[illegible] 600 [illegible] of these girls [illegible] private families, where they are willing to accept lower wages than ever before. I do not [illegible] the outlook is as promising as it might be."

To an American reporter Miss Mary Moscow, head of the employment department of the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, Boylston street, gave her views on the matter. She said:

Wealthy Families Curtailing.

"I noticed the moment the depression came in financial circles that the distress among the domestics became evident. I feel sure that the reason why there are so many searching for positions can be directly traced to the scarcity of money all over the United States.

"Never before have we had so many girls looking for positions through our office, and never before have we had so few persons applying for servant girls.

"Why, last year at this time there was such a scarcity of general housework girls that we had to advertise for them.

"Wealthy families who have usually had a dozen servants in their employ have discharged three, four or in some cases even five. Then in the houses where but two servants were employed, one of them was discharged and all the work has been thrown upon the shoulders of the other.

"In the small houses and apartments where no servants were kept and where women have been hired two or three days per week to do the washing, ironing and cleaning, the housekeeper is doing all her own work. Therefore the helpers and day workers are also very severely affected by the financial depression and are unable to earn one-third the stipend that they formerly did."

Comparison of Wages.

Sociologists, the heads of the charitable institutions and those in charge of the employment bureaus of the city [illegible] declaring that in all lines of work there are and have been more people thrown out of work during the past month than during any time for fifteen years.

The following table shows how the wages of domestics have decreased during the past month:

Class.	Wages [illegible]	Wages Nov. 2
General housework girls	$[illegible] to 8	$[illegible] to $7
Cooks	6 to 10	[illegible] to 8
Second maids	[illegible] 6	4 to 5
Parlor maids	6	5
Laundresses	[illegible] 7	5 to 6

Belem [illegible], Nov. 23.—The confession of the [illegible] Topalze, who is charged with having held up numerous trains and terrorized the country for many years past, implicates Prince George A[illegible] [illegible] as the real head of the [illegible] band of marauders.

Several officers of the railroad are charged by Topalze with being his partners of the [illegible]. Some of these have been arrested while many others are under police surveillance.

The National Board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians is actively engaged in planning for the biennial convention of the order to be held in Indianapolis next July. This gathering will be the most important held in years, and will bring together prominent Irish-Americans from all parts of the United States and Canada. Many Catholic clergymen will also be present.

As has always been the custom, the Ladies' Auxiliary will hold its convention [illegible] the same city along with the [illegible].

During the past year the organization have made rapid progress in building up a sentiment in favor of the [illegible] of Irish nationality, and have increased in members [illegible] every place where branches of the order are located. Thousands of dollars have been paid out for cases of sickness and distress.

What promises to be the most important feature of the coming convention of the men's order will be the report of the National Board relative to the alliance made with the United German societies of the United States.

That the stay of the delegates in Indianapolis may be a delightful one, the local divisions of the organization will entertain on an elaborate scale. Committees are already working up interest among kindred Irish societies with a view to holding a street parade.

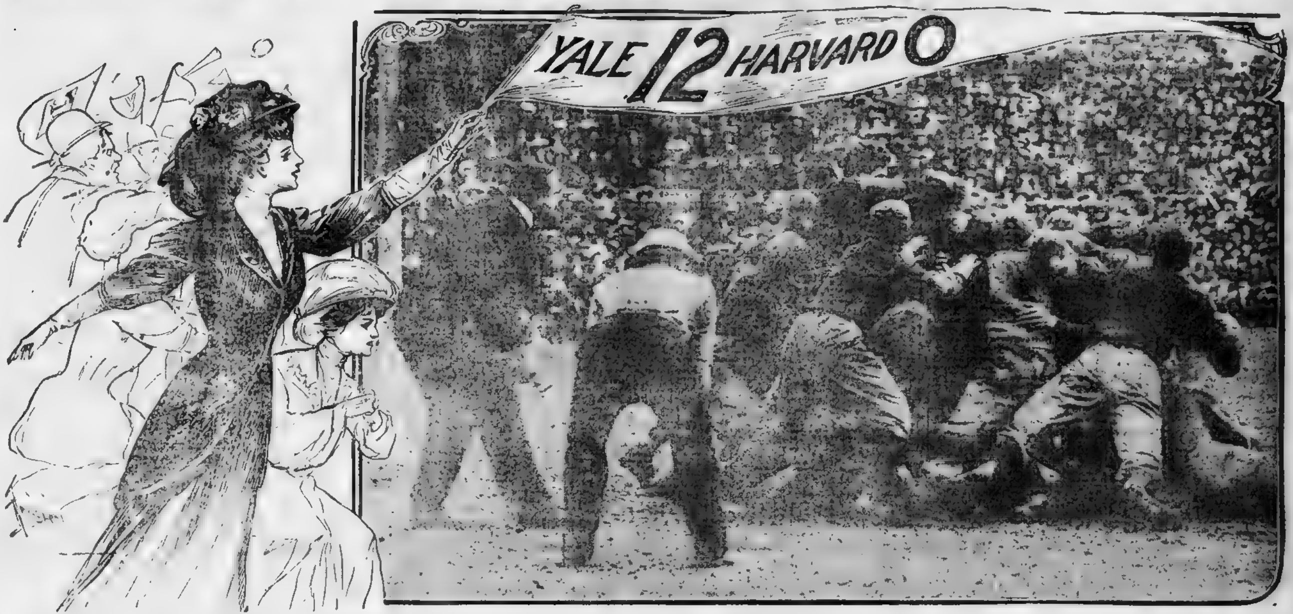
40,000 SEE BLUE CONQUER THE CRIMSON IN GRUELLING CONTEST

Cambridge Team Battles to Finish With Surprising Strength, but Eli Is Invincible



YALE'S FIRST TOUCHDOWN. With half a foot to gain on the third down and only two minutes to play in the first half, Coy was pushed over the line, as shown in the above picture. Harvard made a great stand, but Yale's grit was too much for the Crimson. From a Boston American photograph taken at the Stadium.

HARVARD UNDER-RATED; PUT UP BIG GAME--CAMP

Aggressiveness of Individual Players Gave Crimson Terrific Strength on Gridion.

By Walter Camp.

Harvard proved to be a much underrated team. From the very start they showed an aggressiveness, an individual ability that marked them as distinctly dangerous. Yale found [illegible] Harvard line was going to meet them strongly, but that the [illegible] the Harvard team came with a dash, handling their feet well, and taking every yard possible even after they were tackled.

It was evident that the game was to be no runaway match. And that a mistake on the part of either was likely to prove dear. Harvard by a very pretty onside kick or rather a well-played fairly long punt secured the ball almost at the start, well into Yale's territory. In fact, so well down toward the Yale goal was it that it looked to be within scoring distance.

Yale braced strongly, however, at this point, and Harvard was forced to take a try at a placement goal. It proved a weak attempt, but it had already shown Yale that they were meeting a team likely to take every advantage of errors and alert every moment.

Yale's quarterback quickly picked out two soft places on fakes through the line [illegible] yard line, the [illegible] coming with a [illegible] break which enabled Yale to extricate herself from what was likely to prove an uncomfortable position.

Trying Out for Weak Spots.

Then for a time it became a trying out by each side, to find weak spots with no very marked advantage by either. Harvard's defence was proving troublesome and while Yale was making fair gains there was no steady march down the field. Meantime the minutes were flying by. Yale realizing that the advantage of the wind [illegible] for more strenuous [illegible]

Jones was all the time looking for his chance to [illegible] kick or a forward pass [illegible] in Yale's [illegible] striking distance [illegible] unable to [illegible].

[illegible] opportunity came. Yale [illegible] onside kick, just [illegible] Harvard line [illegible] was [illegible] for Bomar, who had [illegible] and effective work, but whose [illegible] was not of the best. [illegible] halfback showed his [illegible] from the start. He ripped off ten yards with the [illegible] of a bullet. And then, in spite of Harvard's grand brace, the ball went down slowly, but surely, toward the goal line, until it was all but over.

Yale Gains Touchdown

Here Harvard held tight for a single play, but on the next Yale swung through the middle of the line for the first touchdown. Biglow easily converted the goal. [illegible] Starr secured [illegible] yard line.

There was a misunderstanding and then Harvard tried a placement goal, the pass [illegible] poor and [illegible] not expecting to kick the ball. He did kick it, but it was blocked by Biglow.

Harvard recovered it, however, and once more made an attempt at goal from placement. [illegible] through like a streak, and again blocked the ball. Once more, however, Harvard recovered it.

Jones's Clever Dodging

Then came a forward pass which Jones got on Yale's ten yard line and for the first time seemed to find footing and dodged hither and thither through the Harvard tacklers until he reached the thirty yard line, where, as he went down, he dropped the ball and Harvard secured it. The spectators enjoyed this forward pass and the run back by Jones quite as much as if the play would have counted but those who were familiar with the situation had seen Referee Thompson blow his whistle for time just before the ball was snapped back for Newhall's forward pass. There would have been disappointed hearts had Jones cleared the last man, as it looked at one time probable, and gone all the way for a touchdown.

It would not have been allowed in any event, but it went far toward justifying Referee Thompson's usual habit of rushing in for the ball just as he blows the whistle for his call of time.

Yale Stronger in Second.

The second half found Yale coming a

ECZEMA DISAPPEARS

Easy Test Demonstrates Rapid Action of New Drug.

According to an interesting little treatise just issued, the use of poslam, the new discovery for the cure of eczema and other skin afflictions, begins with a practical demonstration of the work it so quickly accomplishes. Sufferers are only asked to obtain one of the experimental samples (which the Emergency Laboratories, 32 West Twenty-fifth street, New York City, will send to anyone by mail, free of charge), and to apply same to a spot the size of a silver dollar. If the spot is healed in twenty-four hours and it is desired to continue the treatment, larger quantities of poslam can be obtained at Houghton & Dutton's and all leading drug stores in fifty-cent boxes and large two-dollar jars. Poslam stops the itching with first application and proceeds to heal immediately, curing chronic cases in two weeks.—Advt.

By L. Rae Murdoch.

A ton of Yale beef and brawn crushed a ton of Harvard beef and brawn to defeat at the Stadium yesterday afternoon by a score of 12 to 0, while the greatest throng that ever packed the enormous amphitheatre cheered and yelled themselves hoarse.

It was a game of "ifs." If Harvard had stopped Yale's onside kick in the last few minutes of play in the first half, Yale might not have scored then. If Yale hadn't had the strength to withstand the last despairing onslaught of Harvard—an attack of a defeated eleven the like of which has never been seen in the annals of Yale-Harvard football—the Crimson would have scored in the last minute of the second half. "If" these things had come to pass, the score might have been different. But it wasn't.

The presence of these "ifs," and the fact that in every part of the game Yale outplayed its opponent tells the story.

Yale won, and she won a clean, hard game of football, in which Harvard made resistance far beyond what her friends had hoped.

Harvard's one ray of hope came in the second half, when the Crimson took a splendid brace after Wendell, left halfback, throwing off the Yale defence, gained thirty yards, the longest run of the game. Harvard worked the ball to within a foot of Yale's line, but Yale made her stand there, and in the last minute of play Harvard lost the ball at Yale's very door.

Sea of Humanity Roars Forth Thrilling Cheers

Forty thousand people looked down upon this combat. They crowded every inch of space available outside the chalk lines that marked the field of battle. Forty thousand men and women, youths and maidens, made a riot of color and a tumult of noise as the battle was fought.

A genial sky smiled upon the field. Below was the smooth green sward, softened a bit by the preceding day of rain, but as unruffled as a table of green baize. Above, the sky was blue, streaked with a few cold gray clouds, through which the sun shone steadily. About the gray amphitheater, rising tier upon tier, was a riot of blue and red. Upon the south side was Yale, upon the north was Harvard.

Long before noon this cold grey monster arena was blotched with little knots of spectators. An hour before the game began it was splashed with color. When the twenty-two gladiators entered the field it was one great sea of humanity, more than enough to populate a city.

They came from all directions, in every conceivable equipage and afoot. The roads were thronged. The cars were jammed. Automobiles and horses jostled each other and both jostled the walking crowds. The highways leading to Harvard Stadium were choked with a bewildering gay concourse of people, drifting along like leaves before an October wind.

Stirring Scene Rouses Athletes to Great Deeds

Hosts of beautiful women, clad in the brightest and best raiment, made a fair setting for the wonderful scene. Once inside, dispersed about the arena, they made a picture of color which would have inspired an artist and which did inspire the young athletes who fought below them.

When these thousands upon thousands were fairly gathered, the tumult began. First it was Harvard. Two thousand youths, with crimson flags, marching from Harvard Square, Cambridge, started the uproar. When they had taken their seats on the north side and centre of the field, the Harvard band bellowed the tuneful "Up the Street" March and ten thousand Harvard voices joined in the chorus. Yale promptly responded. Her band played the famous "Boola" song and eight thousand lusty-lunged Yale men sang out in unison.

Harvard came back with her "hi-yis" and Yale sang "Boola" again. These youths were chivalrous, though. The Yale cheermaster proposed three "good ones" for Harvard. They were given with a vim. Harvard's cheermaster, not to be outdone, ordered three "better ones" for Yale. They came with a roar that echoed and re-echoed over the Stadium and rolled away over Cambridge.

RIOTOUS CROWDS STORM WHOLE HOTEL DISTRICT

Noisy Football Celebrators Engage Police in Affrays Along Hub's Rialto—Streets Roped Off.

In one of the most riotous nights that has ever been known in Boston, some students and many non-students, celebrated the victory of Yale. It took 325 police officers to keep a semblance of order in the streets. At times the affrays grew so serious that squads of police with drawn clubs had to charge the crowds again and again to make passageway for those who wanted to go home.

In front of the Colonial Theatre, where members of both the Yale and the Harvard teams had boxes reserved for them, the crush at 11 o'clock, when the performance was over, was so great that a number of people were run down by automobiles and teams. Not a few had to seek the hospitals to secure treatment for injured feet.

Captain Cain in charge of the big detail of police had to order Boylston street roped off and permit people to pass on either side of the street in one direction. Nearly all the hotels locked their doors at 11 o'clock and refused admittance to all.

Chinatown had to be swept clear of those who thronged the streets at an hour when it was seen that no more could possibly be accommodated in the restaurants.

Thousands of cheering, rioting youths and even young women were on the streets in the downtown section. Cars were held up. Street traffic was made impossible until the police could clear the way.

For a time the tumultuous mob owned Tremont street, while the police were scattered about Washington and Boylston streets, where it was expected that there would be the most trouble.

Harvard Player in Melee.

People riding in open barouches suffered from the gangs. Hats of women were pulled off, and derbies of men smashed shapeless.

Dave [illegible], one of the Harvard players, held up by a crowd of these who were [illegible] students, used his two good hands with such telling effect that more than one person was glad to desist from the attack on his carriage.

The near-students again took possession of various sidewalks and allowed that no one could use the same sidewalks but themselves.

Whole Street Blocked

Probably the worst crush of the night occurred in front of the Colonial Theatre. There thousands of people blocked the street, leaving no room for people to get out of the theatre. Autos and carriages caught in the crush jammed many feet before release could be effected. Those at the theatre who came in carriages or autos were compelled to walk to Park square to get aboard. It was impossible to make way through that awful crowd.

In front of every downtown hotel were stationed four or five officers at each entrance, who, when the order was given, turned away from the doors those who sought to enter. Having nothing else to do, large numbers turned their attention to the street cars and amused themselves by pulling off trolley poles and blocking traffic.

Two Generations Make Merry.

Everybody who had a right to celebrate appeared to have abundant amounts of enthusiasm stored away inside. In front of one hotel, a youth in a fur coat [illegible] toward a familiar form that was endeavoring to unload itself from an automobile.

"Why Paul, my boy, what are you doing here?" demanded the elder, endeavoring to assume an air of stern rebuke.

"Same as you, dad," the youngster answered and being both Yale men they forgot their troubles and embraced over the day's victory.

Gala Time All Round.

There was no very serious disturbance anywhere, and when the crowd got awfully thick somewhere Captain Cain's bluecoats got them on the move in a hurry.

It was a gala time all round and the end was not over for many hours. Even in the early hours of the morning squads of police had to keep urging the merry

Winning Captain Praises Crimson

By Lucius Horatio Biglow,
Captain of the Yale team.

IT was one of the hardest and most trying contests in which I ever took part. Harvard's spirit in the face of defeat was splendid, and it was a terrific task to hold them back the last few minutes.

Of Wendell and Newhall it is difficult to speak without excessive praise. It looked equally when Wendall got away and then several times Newhall was most difficult to stop.

Of course, I am proud of my team, which defeated such a strong opposing eleven, and which were forced to their limit for every point. I am delighted that everybody came through without a single cut, although several of us have bruises and bumps.

HARVARD, TWICE NEAR GOAL LINE, IS HALTED BY SOLID YALE RANKS

PENALTY G[illegible]

Sho[illegible] hailed [illegible] forth [illegible] there was an [illegible] louder than any that had gone before. It came from the Yale benches. Running down the field were twenty men in blue and blue. The Yale team had arrived.

They lost no time in starting their warming up practice, while a busy little long-eared Boston terrier, the sole representative of Harvard, scampered back and forth over the gridiron, and the cheering and counter cheering reached its highest pitch.

Tumult Throughout Stadium.

The Harvard men came soon afterwards, clad in bright new crimson sweaters and carrying bright red Indian blankets. Their appearance was the signal for renewed tumult. It seemed as if the shouting men must have no voice left for the game itself. All the north side of the Stadium rose, waving their myriad of crimson flags, throwing confetti and vying with each other in the warmth of the welcome to the sturdy men upon whom the hopes of Harvard men all over the land were concentrated.

They lost no time when the whistle blew. It was fast, hard football from the start. It was Yale determined to push the ball over Harvard's line and Harvard just as determined to keep her opponents back.

It did not take long to see which was the stronger line. When Yale put her shoulders to it, resistance was almost vain. Yet Harvard did resist, and splendidly. For half the game the ball went up and down the gridiron, in Harvard's territory most of the time, but often [illegible] in Yale's pleasure to add the spice of uncertainty.

Harvard Men Plucky.

By forward passes, by line bucking, by [illegible] runs and by punting, Yale gradually wore down her opponent. Harvard fought every inch—fought to the last ditch. Every exchange of punts netted Yale a little. Every Yale rush was a little farther, a little better than Harvard's counter rushes. Every forward pass was Yale's. Harvard did not try them often. When she did, she failed lamentably. Yale never fumbled; Harvard fingers were as slippery as grease.

Whenever the ball fell free it was a Yale man who dropped on it.

Harvard started with the ball, with Yale at the east goal and a brisk breeze behind her back, which was soon to count when the punting began. Burr kicked off and the pigskin sailed down to Yale's fifteen-yard line. Jones rushed it back fifteen yards and then Coy punted to Harvard's twenty-six-yard line.

Harvard soon found that no gains were to be expected through the line, and Burr punted to Yale's twenty-yard line, beyond the farthest Yale man, who muffed it, and the ball was [illegible]d's, in dangerous proximity to Yale's goal.

Yale Stands Firmly.

Now came the mightiest cheers of encouragement from the Yale shouters, "Hold, Yale!" they yelled. "On, Harvard!" came defiantly back across the field. Yale held. Wendell was the Harvard hero chosen to place the ball behind Yale's goal, but Wendell could not plunge through the wall of stone, nor could the whole solid Harvard weight crush those muscles of steel.

So Harvard had to kick again. It was a kick against the wind, and the ball dropped into Jones's hands on his own [illegible] [illegible] was the nearest Har[illegible] [illegible] the play [illegible] New [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] fifteen yards [illegible] Harvard fumbled [illegible] from field, but [illegible] wind and larder [illegible] punted back, [illegible] Harvard men [illegible]

Crimson Fingers, Slippery

It was the same story all the [illegible]

[illegible] got the [illegible] Jones [illegible] Harvard [illegible] fine forward [illegible] back [illegible] a series of [illegible] pass got the ball again [illegible] to the center.

Harvard captured the sphere on [illegible] and punted it back to [illegible] centre. Coy once more kicked to the Harvard fifteen yard chalk mark. Wendell caught it and returned it twenty yards. [illegible] was penalized for offside play and [illegible]ell, upon whom Harvard was relying, [illegible] shot around left end for a good gain [illegible] and Grant tried the line with[illegible] result and Burr punted. Fish got the ball.

Wendell Sent Into Breach

Again Wendell was sent into the breach. He ran twenty-five yards, only to be sent back because his men held. Rand went against the line without success and Newhall had to boot the leather. Jones started back with it, but was dropped in his tracks. Coy kicked and then Wendell with magnificent interference, went fifteen yards around the end. Again Harvard tried the line, but Yale held. Newhall punted, and Harvard was penalized.

Coy kicked and Wendell came back with the ball. He tried another run and Burr was again obliged to punt. Bomar made a fifteen-yard gain through the line, Coy went through centre for three yards, and then "Tad" Jones kicked again to Harvard's twenty-three-yard line. At this point Philbin was substituted for Bomar and, Yale getting the ball, he shot through the line as if it were paper, for ten yards.

Score Follows Penalty.

Brides could not gain, but Harvard was penalized three yards and this was the blow that landed a score against her. For Harvard held well and Yale would have lost the ball on downs, but for this penalty. Philbin pushed the ball to two yards from Harvard's goal, Coy rushed it to a foot of the coveted line and was then pushed over, while Harvard groaned and a mighty cheer went up from the Yale benches. Brides kicked the goal and the score was six to nothing.

There were only four minutes more to play and for that period the ball was in Yale territory, with Parker trying twice for a goal from field, but his line fading away before the Yale plunge every time and men in blue blocking his kicks.

For a few minutes at the beginning of the second half, the ball went back and forth across the center of the field. Wendell made a magnificent twenty-five-yard run in the midst of this play, but Coy nearly equalled it a few minutes later, after Newhall had been compelled to kick. Coy soon booted the ball out of danger, where it remained, despite Newhall's rushes and kicks.

There were some exchanges of punts and then Yale settled down to line bucking and end plays. Philbin, Coy and Foster were given the ball in turn and each of their efforts netted a gain.

Mowed Down Cambridge Boys.

Finally Jones made a beautiful forward pass to Harvard's eleven-yard line, where Newhall lost it. Philbin got around right end to Harvard's five-yard line, right under the shadow of the Crimson goal posts, and Yale withdrew for another of her conferences that always seemed to presage a touchdown.

They got it a little at a time, by frightful onslaughts on the line of Crimson. They mowed down the Harvard men like so much grass. Harvard held as best she could, while her cohorts in the stand yelled and pleaded for resistance.

It was a mighty battle for a few moments between those last two chalk marks, but Coy, surrounded by ten giants in blue, went through a little at time, until, finally, with a few inches to gain, he went over with a rush, while Crimson warriors lay stretched upon the ground, exhausted.

Game in Face of Defeat.

The goal was a clean one, the score now being 12 to 0.

Again there was a tumult from the Yale seats, but Harvard was game and her cheering forces responded with vigor. It looked hopeless from the side lines, but that was not counting upon the grit that was still left in the Harvard eleven. They were bent upon saving Harvard fame from ignominious defeat. They were determined to score at least once.

The Harvard line seemed as if it had [illegible] re-incarnated. When play resumed, the Crimson men started down the field like a whirlwind. Yale was forced to kick, and then Apollonio was pushed through the line by a revolving wedge play, where [illegible] dropped like sheep in a slaughter house.

Yale came back a moment later with one of the prettiest forward passes of the game—one that clearly demonstrated the superiority of her men. The ball glanced from two Yale men in succession, but a third got it before it touched the ground. Brides went through, but Wendell caught the next forward pass and started back towards Yale's line.

Newhall kicked to Yale's fifteen-yard line, [illegible] punted back and the ball finally reached Harvard's forty-five-yard line, where the Crimson took the brace that will be remembered for a long time in Harvard.

[illegible] throwing off Yale men as chaff as he ran, got around the end for [illegible] yards. Apollonio plunged through left guard for eight yards. Harvard got four more on a trick play. Apollonio wriggled and squirmed two yards farther and an onside kick carried the ball to "Tad" Jones on his twenty-seven-yard line. Quick as a flash, he was downed a yard back.

Harvard held Philbin's rush and Coy [illegible] Harvard territory. Grant caught a forward pass. Wendell got well [illegible] a Yale man gripped his [illegible] and hurled him out of bounds, with a loss of seven yards.

Newhall kicked and the ball was downed on Yale's twenty yard line. "Tad" Jones tried a quarter-back kick, but Harvard was now on her mettle and dropped him promptly. Coy punted out, but Wendell came back with it. Apollonio bucked the line for two gains, and then came the play that sent the blood surging through the veins of the thousands of Cambridge men.

Wendell's Big Run.

It was Wendell who did it. Out of the mass of struggling men, on the next play, shot the doughty left half back. Dodging and fighting and squirming, he ran thirty yards, to Yale's five yard line, where he was forced out of bounds.

It was worth the miles the Harvard graduates had traveled just to hear the old inspiring yell, while Wendell darted down the field. "Harvard, Harvard, Harvard!" resounded over the field as the twenty-two men bent to the task again, and "Hold, Yale, Hold, Yale!" was the echo from the other side.

The ball was away down in the corner of the field. It was fast growing dark and there were but three minutes to play. Each Harvard man and each Yale man of those twenty-two was ready for the struggle of his life.

Crisis of the Whole Game.

Wendell was given the ball again. When the fighters were dragged apart, it lay three yards from the Yale lines and the crisis of the game had come. Another impact, another grinding together of twenty-two struggling men, and the ball was on the two yard line.

It was the last down. Harvard had two yards to go to save the ball and two yards to go to make the touchdown.

This time they were piled upon each other for a full minute before the officials could pull them out of the heap.

Not a sound was heard.

When they saw it, it lay a foot away from the Yale line, and it was Yale's ball.

They lined up again for another play. Sharp and shrill over the field came the whistle. Harvard's last chance was gone.

throngs to move along. Even then they went with reluctance.

At 6 o'clock there was not a table to be had in any hotel or cafe in the Back Bay or downtown. Everyone was crowded to the limit. Tables and seats had been engaged for weeks ahead. Some hotels were compelled to rope off their dining rooms and station guards at the doors to prevent the mob from rushing in and taking possession.

Wait in Lines to Eat.

The Yale contingent seemed to prefer hotels in the Boylston street and Copley square district. They had all the space in the Hotel Lenox, most of the Westminster and Copley square, with the Brunswick, Victoria, Oxford and Nottingham all besieged.

At the Hotel Thorndike, where a long line of waiting persons desirous of securing food and such, stretched into the street, the management arranged for something like eight "sittings" with 300 persons at each sitting.

It was the same farther downtown. Every cafe in Hayward place was packed, and crowds waited in the street for the opportunity of getting inside.

On the streets things were made extremely lively for pedestrians. Several Yale autos decorated with blue lanterns and [illegible] of the same merry hue traveled up and down the streets, their occupants giving vent to their joy that they had won both money and fame on the game with Harvard.

Crimson Boy Braves Crowd.

One youth, with much more aboard than he could carry comfortably, paraded Boylston street decked out with crimson hue from head to foot and with huge chrysanthemums stuck over him wherever a place could be found to hitch one.

He was several times rudely jostled by men wearing considerable blue.

MRS. LONGWORTH CHEERS WENDELL

APPLAUDED UPON ARRIVAL

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth—Alice Roosevelt, as she will always be known to her American admirers—shared with the Duchess of Marlborough the honors of being the most observed at the game.

The Longworths and the rest of the President's party, headed by Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., arrived early. President Roosevelt had been allotted ten tickets and he sent his daughter Alice, and his sons, Kermit and Theodore, Jr., to represent his family.

Mrs. Longworth was everywhere recognized, and was greeted with hand clapping when she passed a group of Harvard women. She was beautifully, but rather quietly, gowned.

The President's daughter was one of the most eager spectators of the game. She watched every play with interest, and emitted a very hearty, feminine cheer when Wendell made his long run in the second half and nearly planted the ball behind Yale's line.

CRIMSON MEN ON THEIR METTLE; BLUES OFF THEIR USUAL GAME

By I. S. Clark.

Football Expert.

Beaten, but not dishonored, was Harvard's lot in the game with Yale. That score of 12 to 0 stands for much. The smallness of Yale's score was the big surprise of the contest and especially to the Blue, as that team was known to be straining itself to beat the Dartmouth score of 22 to 0, made a week ago. As a result it would almost look as if Dartmouth was better than Yale, and you can't convince the supporters of the Green that this is not the case.

That Yale did not score more points was due to two things. Harvard played one of its best games of the season, while Yale was off its form displayed in the game with Princeton last Saturday.

Crimson on Mettle.

The Crimson has shown before this season just as good football, for instance in the Brown game, and as on that occasion played the same mechanical style, making the best of what equipment it had in the way of ground gaining plays.

Just why Yale did not reach the same form as exhibited in that memorable second half against the Tigers is a mystery. The team may have been too much on edge, as there was certain lack of speed which was so prominent a week ago.

Everyone who saw the same team in the two contests were amazed at the deterioration in the Elis. It may have been over confidence, and the hidden strength in defence by the Harvard men considerably upset them.

Tested Yale's Strength.

That Harvard tested Yale's physical condition was evident by the numerous changes made in the Blue lineup before the game was finished.

The effects of the hard scrap with the Tigers came to life as the Crimson played harder and fiercer in a mad endeavor to cross the Blue's goal.

Harvard, too, was forced to delay the game often, as its damaged players recuperated, but in comparison the Harvard players showed determination and grit by staying in the game and sticking it out.

While Yale failed to show its best in open field plays, the men were faster than Harvard in following the ball, and it was an onside kick which put the Blue on the road to scoring the first touchdown. By the use of the play Yale was placed on Harvard's twenty-five-yard line. Then a shrewd move was made by the Yale advisory board.

Philbin, full of life and fresh, was sent in to replace Bomar. Immediately Philbin was given the ball and he slipped through to the ten-yard line.

Stubborn Resistance.

MRS. MARY MAG.

Mrs. Mary Mag, rear 6004 Beltler street, E. Pittsburg, Pa., writes:

"Last spring I had a very severe cold which settled on my lungs. I went to the doctor for some time, but his medicine did me no good.

"Having read in the paper some testimonials of the value of Peruna I decided to try it, and at the same time wrote to Dr. Hartman for advice. I took five bottles of Peruna and am now entirely cured.

"Before taking Peruna I was so run down that I could do no work and could not stand on my feet. My head ached and I could not sleep. I would wake up and cough. In the morning, on rising, I would cough for at least ten minutes. I was alarmed.

"But, thanks to Peruna, I am now enjoying good health. I would not be without Peruna. I keep it in the house and give it to my little boy when he has a cold." —MRS. MARY MAG.

Women are especially liable to colds. These colds occur more frequently during the wet, sloppy weather of winter and spring than any other time of the year. Often they are not considered serious and so are allowed to run on, or they are treated in such a way as to only palliate the symptoms, while the cold becomes more deep-seated and the patient finally awakens to the fact that she has a well-developed case of catarrh.

WOMEN SHOULD BEWARE OF CATCHING COLD.

By reason of their delicate structure the lungs are frequently the seat of a cold, especially if there is the slightest weakness of these organs. The treatment of catarrh of the lungs is also more difficult and discouraging than catarrh of any other organ of the body.

It would be wise, therefore, to guard against it by every precaution possible.

Peruna has been found a most reliable remedy for coughs, colds and catarrh by reason of the fact that it goes at once to the very seat of the trouble.

It searches out every crevice, every duct of the body. It quickens and equalizes the circulation of the blood, thus relieving the congested mucous membranes. It exercises a healing and soothing effect upon the mucous membranes, no matter whether they are the more exposed membranes of the head and throat, or whether they line the remotest cells of the lungs.

PE-RU-NA THE REMEDY FOR CATARRH OF THE LUNGS.

GREAT HOST VIEWS GRIDIRON BATTLE

YALE PLAYERS SOMEWHAT OFF THEIR USUAL GAME

of the long half, but Yale was equal to the emergency, though a touchdown never came with such stubborn resistance as Harvard brought to the front.

This was also true of the second touchdown made by Yale, and in both instances the ball was scarcely carried over the line, and not till the players untangled themselves was it certain that Yale had scored.

Both teams used one formation almost to excess, and that was the fake kick alignment. Harvard was the one to receive the most benefit in its execution. This was due to the ability of Jack Wendell, who made all the star runs for the Crimson. He was afforded excellent interference, and several times he got around the end for gains of fifteen to thirty yards. Yale used the fake kick formation as a starter for more than half its plays. Forward passes were made from this means of deceiving the opposition and plunge into the line as well.

Harvard Seals Line.

In forcing the line Yale's compact interference had more effect than that which Harvard could muster, but the Harvard line usually sealed itself before Yale could gain the necessary ten yards and was obliged to open up its play and take a chance on regaining the ball. The Harvard linemen were on to their job and [illegible] through their Eli foemen when forward passes were worked with greater freedom than at any time this season.

It was the only way they were able to mix up Yale's open field plays, and they showed proficiency in this respect.

Harvard's mainstays in defense of Yale's open plays was her ends. McDonald and Starr were alive to the situation as they have not been before, and besides making many timely tackles, frustrating the Eli rusher, they were close to the ball at all times.

One big asset for the Blue was Coy's punting. In the duel with Burr he clearly outclassed his rival. His spirals carried well down the field, and the whole Yale line was under them, and there was no running back by the Harvard receivers. Both Burr and Newhall, who also did much of the kicking, were handicapped by poor passing.

Poor Passing by Grant.

It was hardly expected of Grant, but the fact remains that the ball came back on the ground and high in the air.

Harvard had the best chance to score the first points when Parker tried for a field goal as he stood on Yale's thirty yard line after ten minutes' play, but the ball came back on the bound to Newhall, who was to hold it.

The same thing happened after Yale had scored its first touchdown and twice Parker booted the ball from poor passes, being blocked, but recovered the first time and lost the second attempt.

Given a variety of plays to work with, the Harvard team would certainly have made it mighty uncomfortable for the New Haven eleven.

AMERICAN RUSHES EXTRAS TO CROWD IN RECORD TIME

When the vanguard of the big crowd from the Stadium reached Harvard square yesterday afternoon at the close of the memorable struggle between the Blue and the Crimson, they found waiting for them copies of the Football Extra of the Boston American containing a complete account of the game.

They were the first papers to reach Harvard square by many minutes, the first papers to reach any part of Cambridge. To get the papers there so that the returning crowd might have an opportunity to digest the effect of plays they had forgotten, some records were broken and were badly broken.

At exactly 4 o'clock a big six-cylinder Ford touring car, loaned by C. E. Fay, manager of the Ford Motor Company, darted away from the Boston American delivery room. H. E. Partridge, who has made other records as a driver, guided the huge machine, loaded with 6,000 copies of the Football Extra. He was accompanied by W. H. Wilkinson, Jr.

Blockaded by Coal Teams.

On Bromfield street there was a hold-up. Two coal teams took opportunity to come out of Province street, and being driven by men who didn't care whether or not the whole street was held up so long as they got out of the narrow passage, proceeded to form a blockade that lasted two minutes.

Once out of that Partridge opened up speed. Beacon street hill was taken on the fly and a clear road made good time possible. Some policemen, not realizing the importance of this haste, held up warning hands as the auto fled by. As it didn't stop they forgot about it.

The first slow-up was made at the corner of Massachusetts avenue and Beacon street, where a bundle of papers was tossed off and the auto sped on across Harvard bridge. At the Brookline street transfer station, which the returning crowd had not reached, more papers were dropped. Boys were waiting to pick them up and distribute them.

At Central Square a relay wagon took up the papers and started down Western avenue to meet the crowds going home by way of Allston.

Great Rush for Papers.

In exactly thirteen minutes from the time it left the Boston American office the car stopped in Harvard square. Bundles of papers were ripped open, and as the crowd surged into the square they made a dash for them. It didn't take long to get rid of that lot.

In the meantime two delivery wagons drawn by the fastest horses in the American stables, in charge of Thomas Burke and F. J. Eastman, had taken the next lot of papers off the presses and headed Cambridge way. The first wagon, making five stops to dump bundles at the points where the crowd reached the soonest, ran to Harvard square in twenty-one minutes.

Because of this record delivery the greater part of the huge crowd of 35,000 people was provided with Boston Americans to read on their way home from the Stadium. No other paper was in sight while the crowd fought to get possession of the American's great extra that contained a full story of every play in the game.

MAKES TWO ARRESTS ON SHOP-LIFTING CHARGE

After following them from department to department of the Timothy Smith store, in Washington street, Roxbury, last night, Special Officer Kilday, of the Roxbury Crossing station, arrested Joseph Wiley of New York and Emil C. Kendall of No. 8 Kenilworth street, Roxbury, on a charge of shoplifting. Kilday accused the men of stealing a pair of gloves, two pairs of shoes and a woman's dress, and it was said at the Roxbury Crossing station that these goods were found on the prisoners.

TURKEY FOR WHITE HOUSE FEAST SLAIN

Westerly, R. I., Nov. 23.—Whatever happens to the money market or to the stock market at large, President Roosevelt and the other Roosevelts will dine finely and freely on Thanksgiving day. This afternoon Horatio Vose, the New England turkey king, killed a twenty-eight pound beauty for the White House feast. The bird is not as big by eight pounds as that first one with which Mr Vose inaugurated his annual White House donation during the second Grant administration thirty-eight years ago, but the poultry king says it is much more tender.

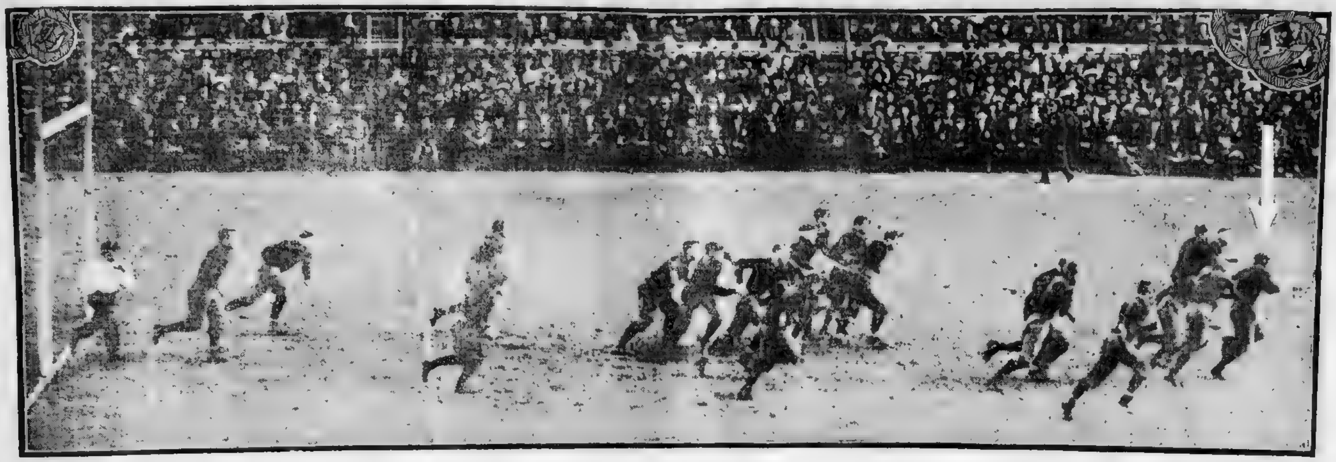
BRIDES, OF YALE, RUSHING THE BALL OUT OF DANGER



The Harvard-Yale game was hardly under way when the Crimson had the ball on Yale's twenty-yard line. Parker missed a goal from placement, the kick being short to Yale's seven-yard line. Then came the play shown in the above picture. ON A FAKE KICK, BRIDES OF YALE RAN THROUGH THE HARVARD TEAM FOR THIRTY YARDS, WENDELL OF HARVARD, BRINGING HIM DOWN ON YALE'S THIRTY-SEVEN-YARD LINE. The arrow in the picture points to Brides. Snapshot by Boston Sunday American photographer.

FORWARD PASSES AND ON SIDE KICKS HARVARD'S DOWNFALL

Crane's Men Showed Marked Lack of Resourcefulness in Their Plays and Formations.

BY A. H. C. MITCHELL.

YALE'S resourcefulness w[illegible] the game for her. The Blue had [illegible] plays to the Crimson's one, and while Harvard put up a splendid exhibition, balking Yale's efforts time and again, the New Haven team kept shifting its attack with bewildering frequency. Though foiled on everything they tried they kept at it with [illegible] for which they are famous, and when the chance offered for a score they took advantage of it.

Yale had two chances and made [illegible] both times. Harvard had two [illegible] failed [illegible].

At the [illegible] was Harvard's ball on Yale's 20-[illegible] missed [illegible] who played a fine game all through the first half, secured the ball for the Crimson. Wendell tried to gain against Yale and Parker essayed a goal from the placement. The attempt failed, the ball falling short and landing on Yale's 7-yard line. That settled Harvard's only chance in the first half. Had Harvard tried again to advance the ball by rushing there was still a [illegible] for a forward pass or the try for goal.

Onside Kick Wins.

The ball then got into Harvard's territory, where it remained until Yale scored, though the Elis had nothing up their sleeve when they crossed Harvard's line.

There remained only a few minutes to play in the first half when Burr punted to Yale's 45 yard line. Yale then tried a variety of straight plays, but their most desperate efforts resulted only in putting the ball on Harvard's 5-yard [illegible]. The [illegible] defense was great and Yale was forced to try something new. It came in the shape of an onside kick, "Tad" Jones to Howard Jones, and it was successful, Howard Jones getting the ball on Harvard's 30-yard line.

Here Yale's resourcefulness came into play. With 30 yards to go Bomar, who was badly banged up in the Princeton game, and who had not fully recovered, made way for a fresh man in the person of Philbin.

Weak Capturing Passes

They handed the ball to Philbin on the first play and he tore off ten yards. He tried again [illegible] half a yard. The great Coy [illegible] and he got three yards [illegible] off four [illegible] Harvard's two-yard line.

Again Coy was given the ball and on the second try at centre he went over for a touchdown. It will thus be seen that Harvard had a chance to score from Yale's 20-yard line and failed, while Yale had a chance to score from Harvard's 20-yard line and made good.

Yale scored in the second half in twenty minutes. Harvard had more than one chance to stop the forward march, but her men failed to gather in Yale's forward passes. Finally the Crimson men made a mess of an easy pass and 'Tad' Jones got the ball on Harvard's eleven-yard line. Philbin carried it to the five-yard line and Coy, in three desperate rushes, scored.

That was all until just before the close of play when Wendell got in a splendid rush from Yale's thirty-six-yard line to the six-yard line. Yale's resourcefulness again came into play.

Tad Jones and Coy were yanked out of the game and Dines and Wylie took their places. This strengthened Yale's defense and Harvard was not able to score, three rushes failing to get the ball over by a foot. It was then Yale's ball on downs and she was nearly forced to a safety on the last play of the game.

Crimson's Stars.

The stars of Harvard were Wendell, Newhall and Macdonald. Wendell's running was the best of the day and his tackling saved Harvard more than once. Newhall ran his team well and did the punting for his side. His kicks did not compare with those of Coy, whose boot was of many horse power.

Newhall had few plays to offer, but the coaches, and not the player, is to blame for this.

MacDonald's tackling in the first half was a thing of beauty. He had played too high on the defense. Capt. Parker did not play his usual strong game, too, and his tries for goal were blocked, he falling asleep on one occasion.

Coy and 'Tad' Jones were not able to pull off any long runs the way they did against Princeton. The Harvard men, one and all, followed the ball in grand style, and Yale could not run back punts.

Where Harvard failed was in letting Yale get away with forward passes and onside kicks.

Yale's forward passes were not well executed and Harvard could have stopped every one of them had the Crimson men grabbed the ball when they had the chance.

Pretty Even in Figures.

The game was much more even than the score shows. In the first half Yale gained 112 yards [illegible] rushes against 76 for Harvard.

Yale got the first down six times by rushes against three for Harvard. Yale's [illegible] forward passes [illegible] 25 yards, while Harvard's three netted 55 yards. Yale gained [illegible] yards [illegible] onside kicks and Harvard [illegible]. Yale was penalized [illegible] yards in the first half and Harvard [illegible].

In the second half Yale gained 82 yards [illegible] rushes while Harvard gained 80. The forward passes yielded 53 yards to Yale [illegible] nothing. Yale made [illegible] and Harvard one. Yale [illegible] 5 yards against 30 yards for Harvard. Yale ran back punts 50 yards and Harvard got 47 yards the same way. [illegible]

HARVARD WAS UNDER-RATED; PUT UP GREAT GAME—CAMP

B[illegible] was grad[illegible] in fo[illegible] was [illegible] line [illegible] Yale. As [illegible] was [illegible]

B[illegible] forces [illegible] pass [illegible] Then [illegible] Harvard [illegible] steadily [illegible] although [illegible] forced [illegible] finally went over [illegible] touchdown, which again Burr converted into a goal.

Harvard's Splendid Pluck

From that time on it was only a question of whether Harvard would succeed in scoring. And with fine pluck they went at it. Wendell was surpassing himself and a long run of his brought the ball down where the Harvard stands rose and roared for a touchdown. The Yale stands answered back "Hold them," and one of the most desperate struggles of the entire game took place right on the edge of Yale's goal. But the ball was too near the goal line really for Harvard's advantage.

It was so near that the Yale defence feared neither forward pass nor onside kick and they could tighten up and [illegible] the Harvard plays in the middle. That is just what happened and Yale held them and the game was over. Not a man [illegible] Harvard team, so far as one could see, [illegible] up to his very limit. And the spirit with which they came back time [illegible] and finally with the game [illegible] they made that struggle [illegible] was worth going a long way to see. [illegible] were particularly brilliant [illegible] kicks well placed and their [illegible] sent with strength and fierceness.

40,000 SPECTATORS AND RIOT OF COLOR INSPIRING SIGHTS

Amid Flaunting of Flags, Rose Roar of Yale Defiance, Answered by Rousing Harvard Cheers.

It was an inspiring sight—a never-to-be-forgotten spectacle, that mighty throng of nearly 40,000 football enthusiasts gathered yesterday in the vast stadium to watch the combat of the Crimson and the Blue. And 10,000 more clamored at the gates all through the memorable contest.

Yale's beef and superior football skill again conquered Harvard grit. But the Crimson warriors emerged from the fierce fray with honor. They were game and plucky clean through. But it was a repetition of the oft repeated and sad tale of defeat with honor.

Between two solid walls of color, the Crimson of Harvard and the Blue of Yale, their well groomed warriors trained to the minute and their nerves and muscles steeled for the fray, struggled to the last ditch. The gladiators of the gridiron grappled with each other with a fierceness that aroused all the fighting instincts in the excited spectators.

Every [illegible] brought a wild riot of color, flaunting [illegible]. First it was the Eli stand screaming forth its admiration. Then back came voluminous roar of defiance from John Harvard's sons. And the rival cheering sections divided attention with the players.

Harvard Game to the End.

Harvard was game to the last—and after that. While the Yale student body ran wildly up and down the battle-swept gridiron, celebrating the victory in a wild frenzy of glee, the Harvard stand, with students' heads bared and flags waving, reverberated with cheer for cheer for the defeated players.

Then the final whistle tore the struggling players apart, the victorious Yale shouters flocked down out of the Stadium in a mighty human flood and began their famous serpentine dance. Behind the Connecticut National Guard band, they zigzagged up and down the field 3,000 strong, and celebrated in a way that made even Harvard sit up and take notice.

They hopped, danced and stood on their heads. They plunged into the crowds of spectators who flocked down on the field to see the "Yale maniacs" at their best. Hundreds of men were toppled over. One woman fainted in the crush. A chorus of shrill feminine screams rent the air as the Yale students bowled into them.

Everything in their path was toppled over, swept by the irresistible march of the victors. Their band blared forth a triumphant march and round and round the field they circled. In front of the Harvard stand they stopped and gave a cheer for the vanquished.

"Poor Old Harvard"

One triumphant cry sounded harsh to the Harvard supporters. It was Yale's song, "Poor Old Harvard." Even before the fray started, the Yale stand groaned it out. It greeted the Harvard team when it sprinkled on the field. It greeted the swan song of the Harvard stand.

Hundreds of ruined derbys lie to-day on the Stadium field. Each time the Yale students marched under a goal post, every one of their hats was thrown over the goal post. When they came down, they were generally booted in every direction.

The bannered hosts of Harvard and Yale swept into the Stadium from every corner of the land. Old graduates came even from the Pacific coast. They camped in the big Stadium bowl before noon and lunched on sandwiches. Then they put on their furs and started barking out cheers.

The flag-merchants, the pop-corn men and fakir with all kind of banners, added to the din. There were girls with pinks and girls with violets. Battalions of pretty women swathed to their ears in furs, flags and flowers screeched their quota of noise to help the cheers.

The big stands were radiant with a shifting mass of color. It was a scene which bewilders. It was a scene that is only seen once each year and the Harvard-Yale game brings it forth.

Society beamed on the battle-ground and turned out in the fullest force and brightest regalia. The Duchess of Marlborough and Mr. and Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont arrived early. Congressman and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth and a party of other notables were there under the guidance of "Teddy" Roosevelt, Jr.

PROGRESS OF BIG GAME TOLD TO THOUSANDS BY SPECIAL AMERICAN CHART

If one could not be at the game, the next best thing yesterday afternoon was to be in front of the Boston American windows and watch the football diagram.

The field was represented by an expanse of black paper, marked off for five-yard lines. A big blue Y and a big crimson H at either end indicated the Yale and Harvard goals, respectively. At the top of this miniature field was an imitation football, blue on one side and crimson on the other, swung on a swivel, so that it could be faced blue or crimson side outward, according to which team had the ball.

As the fortunes of football war took the actual football up and down Soldiers' Field in Cambridge, the facts were telegraphed into the Boston American over its special wire. Bulletins were sent to the man operating the diagram in the window. He moved the miniature football to and fro along the chart, showing the crowd just how the ball stood. In addition, bulletins were displayed describing various plays. Scores were posted promptly, so that the throng in the street knew just what was going on a few seconds after the spectators at the game had seen it.

This street crowd numbered thousands of men, women and children. People hurrying to the South Station stopped to watch the diagram. Business men halted to study the game. Stenographers and clerks, out early Saturday afternoon, put in several minutes to watching this realistic reproduction of the contest.

A squad of police from Lagrange street station, in charge of Sergeant Bowley, was busy keeping the sidewalks and street open enough to allow pedestrians and vehicles to pass by.

As the battle waged to and fro in Cambridge and was told on the diagram the crowd cheered or looked depressed, according to its sympathies. When, toward the very last, Harvard seemed about to score, the crowd held its breath. Then the announcement that the game was over and Yale had kept Harvard from scoring was greeted with a mighty yell, after which the crowd melted away.

AUTOS CHECKED IN VACANT LOTS WORTH ABOUT $2,000,000

A thriving business was done in the vacant lots around Soldiers Field, "checking automobiles." Parties came by automobile from all over Eastern Massachusetts.

The police would not permit their cars to stand in the streets leading to the Stadium, so they had to be placed in the vacant lots. The owners of these lots had youths on hand to check the automobiles, much as one would check his coat and hat before dinner at a hotel.

Every lot was packed, and some cars had to be placed fully a quarter of a mile away. One automobile man estimated that there were nearly $2,000,000 worth of automobiles there.

In one case a youth picked up some spending money by leasing space over a lot in which he had no interest. He scampered when the owner's agent happened to appear.

The streets leading to the Stadium were well policed, so there was no congestion, despite the size of the crowd.

CAMBRIDGE BELLE WHO WAS COURTED AND WON BY HARVARD JUNIOR

Miss Vera E Rumery

WINS HOCKEY GAME; LOSES HER HEART

Grozier-Rumery Engagement the Result of a Pretty Romance.

A romance, which had its inception when the handsome heroine led the Newton High School hockey team to victory, has culminated in the engagement, announced yesterday, of Miss Vera Evelyn Rumery to Richard Grozier, a Harvard junior.

Miss Rumery is daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Rumery of No. 297 Cabot street, Newtonville. Her fiance is the son of Edwin A. Grozier, and lives with his parents No. 168 Brattle street, Cambridge. He is only twenty-three and his bethrothed a year younger.

Because of the illness of Mr. Grozier's mother, and, owing to the fact that he has two years more at Harvard, the date of the wedding has not yet been determined.

Miss Rumery, who is of medium height and a very pretty girl, is a [illegible] of the younger Newton society set. In high school she was conspicuous for her athletic prowess, [illegible] one of the best hockey players in the school.

She captained the team one year, and last year coached the polo aggregation through a successful season. She is also fond of tennis, basketball and snowshoeing.

M'DONNELL'S IS SHOPPERS' MECCA

Tremont Street Store Is Daily Thronged With Delighted Christmas Buyers.

Boston merchants, viewing with wonderment the remarkable growth in the volume of business of MacDonnell's store, No. 80 Tremont street, have long pondered over the reason for its increasing popularity. The Boston American sought Mr. MacDonnell for the explanation. His terse answer was:

In those four words is [illegible] told the entire story of the almost unprecedented growth of one of Boston's most prominent business houses. It's growth has been so steady that it has won the name of "The Big Little Store."

Not alone is the fame of "The Big Little Store" confined to Boston's business world, but it is country wide. Its methods and maxims have been followed in many large cities. It also has an individuality as marked as it is pleasing and desirable.

It is one of those shopping places where the buyer invariably finds what is sought. Its stock in its various lines, gloves, hosiery, veilings, neckwear, underwear, shirt waists and handkerchiefs, is most complete, and the shopper is sure of finding what is wanted in MacDonnell's.

Just now the Christmas spirit has begun to invade the establishment and unusual preparations have been arranged to handle the holiday crowds. Nearly everything that a woman could desire in the lines carried by the establishment have been obtained after careful selection, and the clerks take pride in that fact.

Like the store, the windows are small but attractive. They are arranged with much taste, and once the shopper glances at the show windows it is seldom that she fails to enter. That the store is popular is vouched for by the constant stream flowing through its portals from early morn until night.

MRS. RAND JUBILEE AT BARNARD SALE

Mrs. [illegible] Rand will have a jubilee celebration of her seventieth birthday at the semi-annual sale of the Barnard Memorial, No. 10 Warrenton street, next Friday evening, November 29, from 7 to 10 o'clock, and Saturday afternoon from 2 to 6. There will be a good entertainment from 8 to 9 and Mrs. Rand will recite two poems that she read in the Memorial more than fifty years ago. She will wear a plaid silk dress that she wore when a pupil in the old [illegible] on [illegible] street. Mrs. Rand will also wear a [illegible] skirt which has been stowed away for years under the eaves of the garret in the late Colonel Robert Gould Shaw's fine old mansion in West Roxbury.

Mrs. E. S. Stiles, Miss Marguerite Rand of the Emerson School of Oratory and Miss [illegible] will also give recitations.

BRIDE OF AN HOUR NOW HUNTS HUSBAND

MYSTERY TO THE FAMILY

Married but an hour and a half, Mrs. Minnie T. Mark, a member of one of Watertown's best families, separated from her husband, Arthur T. Mark, and for eight months her parents have searched for him or for some information as to what he is.

Nobody has been [illegible] any [illegible] upon the whereabouts of the [illegible] band, or even to [illegible]. He is a complete mystery to [illegible] family and to the young [illegible] who married him [illegible] on the spur of the moment and repented just as quickly.

Although Arthur J. Mark and Miss Minnie Tourtelotte Sawyer [illegible] last March the fact did not become known until now through the efforts of the Sawyer family to keep it quiet until they could discover the identity of Mark.

Prominent in Watertown.

Mrs. Mark's father is Herbert H. Sawyer, an ex-selectman of Watertown, a director of the Union Market National Bank, owner of the Metropolitan [illegible] lately a treasurer of the E[illegible] Manufacturing Company of Watertown. She graduated from [illegible] Seminary in 1901 [illegible] prominent in Watertown's society [illegible] particularly the Wisdom Club [illegible] of that organization. The Sawyers occupy a palatial home in Mar[illegible]

Miss Sawyer met Mark at Megansett, where the Sawyers have a summer home. The story of their courtship has been kept a secret by her family. They went to Providence, where they were wedded, and took the next train for Boston. Mrs. Mark, it seems, repented and [illegible] upon left her husband, he vanishing [illegible] and she returning to her parents' home.

The Sawyer family were grief stricken when they heard the truth, but since the failure of their efforts to learn anything about Mark they are glad that it was no worse.

Repented After Ceremony.

"Nothing is known of the actual history of Arthur J. Mack," said one who is close to the Sawyer family, telling the story to a Boston American reporter. "Contriving by extraordinary wiles to win the temporary admiration of Miss Sawyer, he allowed no time to be wasted in bringing about the secret marriage. They went to Providence and were married there in the afternoon.

"When the last words of the ceremony were pronounced, Miss Sawyer came to a realizing sense of what she had done and bitterly repented. She allowed her husband to accompany her as far as Boston on the first train leaving Providence, and parted with him here for all time."

Young Mrs. Mark is with her parents and is said to endorse every step they [illegible]. She admits that she married Mark, [illegible] desires [illegible] say whether she knows where her husband is now located.

KILLS HER HUSBAND WITH A HAIRBRUSH

Canton, Ohio, Nov. 23.—A blow on the hand from a wire hairbrush during a friendly scuffle with his wife caused the death to-day of John [illegible], aged thirty-two. A few days ago he and his wife had a playful [illegible] when she struck him on the hand with a wire hairbrush. He felt a sting at the time, but thought no more of the accident until what physicians termed blood poisoning set in. The patient was treated at [illegible] Hospital, but all efforts were in vain.

FREED FROM CELL, RAVES OF BEAUTY

FACES JURY AFTER YEARS

Dreaming, for twenty long years, while babies grew up to become young men and young women, while the great city of his birth developed so that when he saw it after that interval of a score of years he hardly knew it, Henry Shipman, wife murderer and inmate of Matteawan Insane Asylum, declares that during his long captivity he thought of naught else than Isabel Evesson, the beautiful former Boston actress.

"Crime? I remember no crime that I ever committed," he say. [illegible] the head, [illegible] on the old Boston Museum stock company.

Raves of Love for Actress.

"Did I know her? Yes. To meet her once, to even see Miss Evesson, is never to forget her. What [illegible] of her. I loved her twenty years ago and I love her still [illegible] always will [illegible] her.

"They say I killed my wife, and that's why they kept me in a madhouse. Well, my head's all right now, only I don't remember killing her. But I must find her [illegible] beautiful woman the moment I have been acquitted at the trial they say they will soon give me."

Raving of his love for the beautiful actress who with her almost equally pretty sister, Estelle Clayton Evesson, is living in this city and is [illegible] conducting a magnificent fight for untold millions of dollars' worth of real estate scattered all over the city, the property of their grandfather Abraham Bassford, Shipman was carried away to the Tombs for re-trial.

This man has lain in a padded cell in Matteawan since 1887, when he shot and killed his wife. His friends, convinced that he had regained his sanity, demanded a medical examination and his release.

Hopes He Will Forget Her.

And what does beautiful Isabel Evesson, so well known and so greatly admired and beloved in Boston, say to these extravagant rhapsodies of this man Shipman? She [illegible]:

"Why, I do recall meeting Shipman once, away back in the eighties it must have been, when I was but little more than a slip of a girl.

"With my mother and sister I was crossing the Atlantic when he was introduced to me. I saw him later on shipboard when I was returning to this country.

"Once after he had killed his wife and had been sent to the asylum, he wrote a letter to me asking that I aid him in securing his release. It was a very crazy letter and full of ravings and rantings, so I paid no attention to it than I had the man himself.

"I hope he will not annoy me if he is set free. If he had forgotten what he calls his love for me when he forgot his crime, I would be better pleased."

Fights for Fortune.

But while Shipman is dreaming of her in his little cell in the Tombs, Isabel Evesson, the widow of Almyr W. Cooper, a Philadelphian and nephew of Richard Harding Davis, is busied with her sister, Estelle, in her fight to regain the millions which should have come to her from her grandfather.

So engrossed is she in the undertaking which now promises so much, after years of discouragement, that for more than a year she has refused all theatrical engagements. In their fight the plucky women are ably assisted by a great corporation, the Bassford Estate Corporation, which was formed by rich and influential men just especially to see to it that the pretty actresses came into their own again. And now it seems that they will, and when they do the wealth of the Rockefellers will not be large when compared to their inheritance.

The Duchess is so delighted with Boston and she has so many friends here to visit that she plans upon remaining here for at least ten days more. Of course she will pay daily visits to her brother, Harold S. Vanderbilt, who is confined to the Harvard Infirmary, suffering from typhoid fever.

With O. H. P. Belmont, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, her mother, Sydney Smith, Felix Ingraham and George C. Leeds, all of New York, the Duchess went to the Stadium yesterday afternoon and saw the great Harvard-Yale gridiron battle. In her hand fluttered a tiny Harvard streamer, which she vigorously waved whenever the opportunity was given her.

Immediately after the game Mr. Belmont was driven to the Back Bay railroad station, where he entrained for New York, a business engagement there imperatively requiring his presence. The rest of the happy party, with the Duchess its very life, was whirled back to the Hotel Lenox, their stopping place during their stay in this city.

One of the daily cares of the Duchess is to see to it that some beautiful floral token be either taken or sent to her sick brother. She chaffed him good naturedly yet sympathetically upon his being confined to his bed when the greatest football game of the year of his college was being played and yet she managed to greatly console him and to tell him that she would cheer for Harvard with all her might and try to take his place at the Stadium in encouraging the Crimson players to win from their time-honored rivals—Yale.

FLEISCHER TALKS ON ADAM AND EVE

Says Bible Story Shows the Real Beginning of Morality.

In the fourth of his series of "Bible Talks," given yesterday in Temple Israel, Commonwealth avenue, Rabbi Charles Fleischer discussed the Adam and Eve story and the theory of evolution. He said in part:

"The Adam and Eve story in the Bible is simply the conception of one of the early writers as to the real beginning of morality. It tells of man's condition during the infancy of the human family, and here begins the present theory of evolution.

"Even as a child lives its early days in a 'paradise,' needing to be told what is right and what is wrong, so once upon a time the human race lived in a state of ignorance or irresponsibility. But, as with the child, the day of awakening had to come to primitive man, and with it came morality.

"The Bible does not teach the fall of man, but it teaches that man rose above the beast and took upon himself the burden of morality. The other animals are unmoral or immoral, but man should develop the mental, moral, physical and spiritual side of his nature and discard all of the animalistic traits."

At the services, held at Temple Israel to-day at 11.15, Rabbi Fleischer will speak on "Suceeding Generations."

MOST USEFUL MAN IN CHICAGO IN HOSPITAL

Chicago, Nov. 23.—Joseph Klauda when arraigned before Municipal Judge Fake yesterday on a charge of impersonating an officer said:

"Judge, I am the most useful man in Chicago. I am an officer of the law and a guard of public safety. I captured Stensland in Algiers and caught Richard Walton, the murderer of Mrs. Lillian Grant."

He was sent to the Detention Hospital.

Weak Kidneys

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease; therefore, when through neglect or other causes kidney trouble is permitted to continue, more serious results are sure to follow.

Your other organs may need attention—but your kidneys most, because they do most and should have attention first.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, because as soon as your kidneys begin to get better they will help all the other organs to health.

District Attorney, Guarding Movements, Fails to Enter Order for Special Panel.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, Nov. 23.—The second trial of Harry K. Thaw for the murder of Stanford White will be a more bitter unyielding contest of legal talent than the first memorable battle which sent Thaw back to his cell in the Tombs, if the attitude of District Attorney Jerome is an indication.

Jerome is wearing a mask to the public, the courts and the counsel for Thaw. In no manner does he indicate what his intentions are, and he will not drop the slightest hint which might prove a note of warning or the slightest foundation for preparation to the defence.

The trial is scheduled for December 2. Announcement of this date was long since made, and Thaw's counsel made preparations accordingly. Now it develops the order that the way Mr. Jerome obtained from Justice Dowling for the drawing of a special panel has not been entered.

Seeks Further Delay

"I have been informed that it is not the intention of Mr. Jerome to enter the order," said Martin W. Littleton, chief counsel for Thaw. "This appears as if he intends to seek further delay. I cannot understand why Harry Thaw is not accorded a speedy trial, especially in view of the fact that the District Attorney and his eminent medical advisers have heretofore publicly declared that Thaw was insane at the time of the killing of Stanford White."

This statement is regarded as being significant. It again outlines the stand the defence will take—that of insanity; and it evidences that Mr. Littleton is aware of the fact that while Jerome admitted Thaw was insane at the time of the killing he is just as willing to admit that he is perfectly sane now, otherwise he would not insist on keeping an insane man locked up in the Tombs.

It is now clear that the legal battle will be one for insanity on the part of the defence and sanity on the part of Jerome.

Jerome Playing for Time.

There can be no other reason for a postponement of the second trial than this peculiar reversal of opinions. As a matter of fact, the shrewd district attorney finds it necessary to gain time because of the peculiar position his shiftiness has placed him in. He will have to overcome the fact that he admits the possibility of strange freaks of brain—a strong point in Thaw's favor, for if the jury finds that he should be sent to Matteawan insane asylum he cannot be kept long in that institution, considering that the Commonwealth now maintains, by the position of its officials, that he is now sane. The clouds are lifting from the future of the young millionaire.

Thaw's Uncertain Moods.

Thaw in the meantime is in rather uncertain moods. He is morose at times, chafing over delay; he harps upon the possibility of being released before Christmas, and again he is as lighthearted as he could be. He plays handball in the prison yard when the weather permits and is strong and healthy. When he appears for trial he will not wear a prison pallor. On the contrary, his exercise in the yard has given him a good color. He spends hours daily going over briefs in his cell and making marginal notes on the records of his last trial. His chief counsel, Mr. Littleton, has a most enthusiastic confidence.

UNDERWOOD SPEAKS TO BEACON SOCIETY

At the monthly diner of the Beacon Society at the New Algonquin Club house last night William Lyman Underwood of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology gave a very interesting talk on "Bypaths in Florida" and "Nassau," illustrated by finely colored stereopticon views from photographs which he had taken himself.

Among the 75 which were present were the following: F. H. Kendall, Pery Walton, J. J. McCarthy, Henry W. Hart, N. J. Rust, John H. Cross, Charles A. Jopp, Dr. J. F. Bush, C. H. Sherburne, George Willcomb, Dr. E. H. Stearns, Charles S. Denison, Stephen L. Bartlett, A. S. Hanson, C. M. Burt, John Reding, J. H. Hustis, Frank Barr, Dr. W. H. Baker, H. W. Wadleigh, Hon. Henry H. Sprague, John Humphreys, S. K. Pasmore.

STURTEVANT GIVES UP BANK POSITION

James S. Sturtevant, for over twenty-one years secretary of the Medford Co-operative bank and one of its organizers and founders, father of Miss Nellie A. Sturtevant, who was murdered on May 7, 1903, and whose slayer was never discovered, has resigned the position.

Mr. Sturtevant's retirement is due to his age and the fact that he does not feel able to attend to the rapidly increasing business of the bank. He celebrated his 71st birthday October 30. His resignation has been accepted by the board of directors of the bank.

Mr. Sturtevant expects to retain the position of treasurer of the institution with which he has been so long and ably connected. A new secretary will be chosen in his stead by the shareholders December 4.

BANKER'S 'AFFINITY' NOW SEEKS $100,000

'Love Turns to Hate When Capitalist Gives Up Plan for Divorce.

SHE GUARDS HIS LETTERS

New York, Nov. 23.—Since Banker Louis A. Prince's wife begged the police to find her husband and restrain him from committing suicide with another woman, his "affinity" has announced herself as Mrs Maude A. Robinson, and declares that she will sue him for $100,000 for breach of promise.

Mr. Prince is the New York representative of the Mutual Trust Company of Mexico. Mrs. Robinson, who is an unusually beautiful woman, as is Mrs. Prince, asserts that she left her husband for her love of Prince and that he promised to secure a divorce and wed her. She was formerly a show girl, her last appearance being with the "Belle of Mayfair."

"Mr. Prince is not missing," says the handsome "affinity." "He has been in New York all the time: at his office, at his mother's home, and with me. My husband introduced us, and we loved each other at first sight. I gave up everything for him, and he promised to get a divorce and marry me when his wife returned from Europe.

Love Turns to Hate.

"Last Sunday Mrs. Prince returned. On Tuesday, in spite of his promise to me that he would not see her, I met Mr Prince and his wife on Broadway. I upbraided him, and he said he was obliged to be courteous to her.

"Wednesday Mrs. Prince came to my apartments in the Hotel Carlton, at Broadway and Forty-fourth street, and made a scene. She did not find her husband there. That night I dined with Mr Prince at the Plaza Hotel and when I got home I found detectives had been there.

"The next afternoon I lunched with Mr Prince and he told me something that has turned my love into hate. He wanted me to leave New York for a time until 'all this blows over.' He said he would pay all my expenses, but he could not afford to have his business endangered by such an affair. I asked him about the divorce, and he said he had no grounds for applying for one.

"I shall sue him for $100,000 for breach of promise. I have his letters and I have witnesses. I can stand this no longer."

Has Many Love Letters.

Mrs. Robinson has many letters which she declares were written by Mr. Prince. Following is an extract from one of them:

> Dear Lady:

GIRL AGAIN WAKES FROM STRANGE COMA

May Anthony Conscious for a Few Moments and Then Relapses Into Insensibility.

Temporary restoration of her mental faculties for a few minutes yesterday lead the City Hospital physicians to believe that eventually Miss Mary E. Anthony, who has lain for thirty-five days in a state of coma as the result of injuries received in an auto accident, will recover her normal senses within a short time.

Miss Anthony passed from her unconscious state for a few minutes yesterday. She smiled at the attentions of the nurses and gazed curiously about at her surroundings, but she did not utter any word that would lead the physicians to believe that she realized the suffering she had undergone or was aware that her ailment was one which had attracted the attention of the entire medical and scientific world.

While it is expected that her recovery will be slow, it is thought that Miss Anthony may be able to leave the hospital within a few weeks. Her moments of consciousness have been noticed to be much longer in duration, and physicians declare that it is only a question of time when she will undoubtedly be herself again.

Miss Anthony lives on Cazenove street, and the accident which caused her strange condition occurred on Dartmouth street, when she was returning from the Food Fair, at which she was a demonstrator.

YES! These are "the boys"—the famous big-little men—in the great "Slim Jim" "Sawed Off" PUZZLE

Five quaint little men with different sized hats stand in line. No TWO MEN are the same height—nor are any TWO HATS, either.

Now, the PUZZLE is to change the FIVE HATS on the heads of the FIVE MEN so that the distance to the ground from the TOP of each man's hat will be just THE SAME.

This is the great puzzle of the quaint little men, the funny "Slim Jims" and the "Sawed Offs"—the puzzle that has amazed and perplexed both old and young.

If you can't get the hats transferred so as to make the top of EACH the SAME height from the ground, call on some of your friends to help you.

STEEL KING'S BRIDE AT FOOTBALL GAME MASKS SORROW WITH A SMILE

Conspicuous at Stadium, Mrs. Mabelle Corey Gilman Conceals Her Breaking Pride.

SEES END OF SOCIAL PLANS

UNHAPPY SAYS FATHER

One Sister Marries Variety Theatre Manager, Another Chooses "Champion Barber."

THOUGH the iron has entered the soul of the once care-free Mabelle Gilman-Corey, the one-time "mocking-bird" girl, about whom this whole continent raved not so many years ago, she sought bravely to conceal it yesterday afternoon as she sat in conspicuous seats with her husband, the president of the United Steel Corporation, at the Harvard-Yale football game.

It was only the most watchful observer who would see that the sudden marriage of one of her sisters, the engagement of another and the threatened suit of her father for being thrown out of the proud Fifth avenue mansion in New York, wherein, it has been asserted, for months she has practically been a prisoner, is telling upon her one-time gaiety and vivacity.

But there were moments of abstraction when the fair face was clouded, looking all out of place in that brave welkin, which was thrilling with deliriums of joy and disappointment as the two varsity elevens battled, that told of the other battle that was waging in the breast of the wife of W. Ellis Corey and how the recent actions of her father's family have mortified her and all but brought her pride to the breaking point.

Sought High Social Place.

Possessed of the unlimited wealth of her husband, the purse-proud steel king of America, her eyes naturally turned to the conquering of society. She felt that in time resentment against her husband and her marriage would cool, and she could become a social light.

Then came the visit of her father, Charles H. Gilman, to New York. His being practically thrown out of the house by her irate husband was a severe blow, but now comes the marriage of her sister, Pearl, to Charles Alisky, the proprietor of ky, the proprietor of cheap variety houses variety houses in San Francisco and Los Angeles, and the engagement of her sister, Ruby, to Charles Hegerdon, whose professional cards bespeak him to be the "Champion Heavyweight Barker of the West."

Pearl is but twenty years of age and Ruby is eighteen. These two girls Charles H. Gilman had counted upon to wreak his sweet revenge upon Steel King Son-in-law Corey for forbidding him the entry to Mabel's gilded cage, the Fifth avenue mansion.

Gilman was having his daughters carefully rehearsed preparatory to entering them into New York vaudeville, where they were to do a stunt and sing songs all reflecting upon Corey and his moneyed pride. Now these plans fall through.

With Eunice, the third of the Gilman girls, Mr. and Mrs. Gilman are living this fall at No. 251 West Thirty-fourth street to put their finishing touches on the undoing of their talented daughter's happiness. For Gilman has threatened to sue his rich son-in-law for $2[illegible] damages on charges of alienating his daughter's affections from him.

Triumph Turns to Ashes.

Denied entrance into New York's smart society, denied her very freedom by her husband, forbidden to see her father and mother, practically a prisoner in her splendid mansion in Fifth avenue, Mabel Gilman's triumph is turning to ashes.

The actions of her father have grieved her greatly, for they have fortified her husband in his determination to turn her family away from his home forever, and to do all that he can to disown them.

Now, coupled with all this, comes the startling story that Pearl has married Alisky, the variety theatre manager, and Ruby the "Champion Heavyweight Barker of the West."

Fair Mabelle Gilman Corey feels that her cup of sorrow is fast filling to the brim. She feels that her social aspirations are all but hopelessly dashed and that despite her wealth she has no social position, a thing which this ambitious woman so fondly craves as necessary to her very existence.

She knew that the suit threatened by her father would probably vanish in thin air and that he and his wife could not always remain in New York to harass and annoy her once they were forbidden access to her presence by her husband. But the marriage of Pearl and the coming marriage of Ruby to the "Barker" are things that cannot be undone, and they are, she feels, to work her undoing.

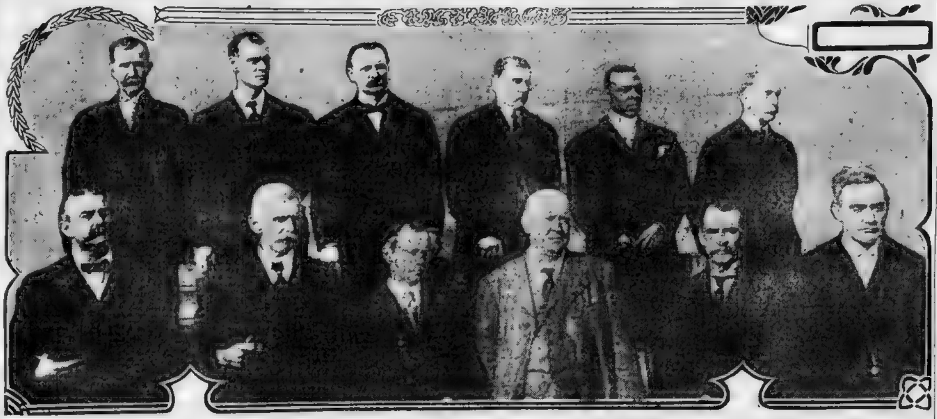
KING ALFONSO ANNOYED BY MISTAKEN IDENTITY

Wide Publication of Pictures Has Little Effect in England.

London, Nov. 23.—Notwithstanding the wide publication of his pictures, King Alfonso has been the victim of a series of inconvenient mistaken identities since his arrival in England.

He has been prevented from entering Kensington Gardens, he has been held up in his motor, he has been forced back by loyal policemen with the rest of the crowd from the gates of Kensington Palace; he has been jeered at by children on the streets as a bilious and dyspeptic-looking foreigner, and in a Bond street shop the tradesman was exceedingly chary in taking the young man's order, either in fear of a hoax or under the impression that the Spanish prisoner swindle was about to be worked off on him.

JURY IN WHOSE HANDS RESTS FATE OF MRS. BRADLEY, NOW ON TRIAL FOR DEATH OF SENATOR BROWN



WESTON IN INDIANA, NEARS CHICAGO GOAL

Aged Pedestrian Shows Marvelous Endurance on the Final Stretch of His Great Walk from Portland.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Chicago, Nov. 23.—Well into Indiana and now only a little more than 100 miles from the Windy City, Edward Payson Weston, to-night, neared Goshen on his wonderful 1,400 mile tramp from Portland, Me., to this city.

Worn with fatigue, trampled by Cleveland throngs and still suffering from indigestion, the marvelous sixty-nine year old pedestrian has shown great recuperative powers on his final stretch of his long journey and declares that he will be in this city by Tuesday night. If he succeeds, as seems likely, he will beat by two days his record of forty years ago, when he made Chicago in twenty-six days, not counting Sundays.

Arrives in Indiana.

When Weston arose this morning in Bryan, O., he mapped out seventy miles as his day's labor. The pedestrian declared that he was feeling better than at any time this week and [illegible] proof of his assertion [illegible] his first [illegible] breakfast since he left Clyde [illegible] of the week. Weston arrived in Bryan at 12:15 this morning. He slept until 6 a. m. At 6 [illegible] he started [illegible] first eleven miles through heavy sand roads in three hours. In high spirits and seemingly enjoying the brisk morning air, Weston passed over the Ohio State line and arrived in Butler, Ind., at 11 o'clock, covering the distance of nineteen miles from Bryan in four hours and a half.

Rests To-day, Then to End.

Included in this time is a few minutes spent in two or three towns to address crowds. [illegible] said he was in fine condition and completely over the effects of the clam chowder dished out to him in the country inn at Clyde.

Sunday will be a day of rest and evidently will be of great benefit, putting the aged pedestrian in tip top condition when he starts out early Monday morning for the jog into Chicago. Weston's manager claims that he will arrive here Tuesday night. Goshen is 111 miles from Chicago and Weston expects to cover the distance easily in two days.

SAYS SUPREME COURT EXCEEDS ITS POWERS

Frank Criticism by Eminent North Carolina Jurist Startles Economic Club Audience.

Declaring that "five lawyers, staid, venerable, conservative and, by reason of their years, not unnaturally averse to new measures, can at will bring any movement of the people or of Congress to an imperative halt," and that "ninety millions must instantly stand still at their command," Hon. Walter Clark of Raleigh, N. C., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, electrified his hearers at the first dinner discussion of the season of the Economic Club of Boston, which was held last night at the American House.

Judge Clark, who was elected Chief Justice of North Carolina by the largest majority ever given to any man who ever ran for any public office in North Carolina, and that in the teeth of bitter opposition by the Tobacco Trust and the railroads, was the first speaker of the evening to discuss the general topic "The Federal Constitution in Its Relation to Present Day Conditions and Needs."

Judge Clark's positon on the power of the Supreme Court as it developed from his address was seen to be strikingly similar to the views held and expressed by William Randolph Hearst.

The other speakers to discuss the question of the evening were Dr. Henry Wade Rogers of New Haven, Ct., dean of the Yale University Law School; Hon. Edward B. Whitney of New York, ex-Assistant United States Attorney-General, and Professor Franklin H. Giddings of Columbia University, New York.

William H. Lincoln of Boston was the presiding officer. The dinner discussion of the club was preceded by an informal reception in the parlors of the American House at 5:30 o'clock last evening. There was a large turnout of club members and especially invited guests.

Speaking from the theme of the evening and declaring that "At the last session of Congress there was presented to the world one of the most singular spectacles known to history," Judge Clark said, in part:

Discusses Evils of Railroads.

"The evils of our railroad managements, which are manifold and serious, had engaged the thoughts of the people. In sympathy with their just demands the President had recommended to Congress the enactment of remedial legislation. The House of Representatives after full debate passed a bill for railroad regulation. It went to the Senate. In that body it was discussed and debated.

"The necessity for such legislation and the public demand for it were admitted by all. As to the justice and propriety of the measures proposed, there was slight difference of opinion. But there was elaborate and long discussion.

"Over what? Why, whether the subordinate Federal Judges would issue their mandate to stop the execution of an Act of the American Congress, passed by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and approved by the President, and if they did so, whether such mandates would be approved by a majority of the Supmreme Court.

Are Judges Above the Law?

"Nowhere else on the globe at any time has such a spectacle been presented. In no other country in all time has it ever been claimed that the judges thereof had power to impose their veto upon the action of the lawmaking power. Elsewhere the judges have been bound by the laws and are not superior to them.

"Yet here were ninety Senators, the representatives of forty-five sovereign States, turning over volumes of reports and guessing and prophesying as to what five elderly lawyers would or would not permit.

"Not all the world besides, with all their armies and navies combined, can control or hinder the will of the 90,000,000 of the American people, expressed by their Congress and Executive, as to the management of their executive affairs. Only God in Heaven has power to say them nay. Whence then comes this power of five men to nullify legislation or to shape it by fear of nullification?

"One of the great fundamental ideas of all Republican constitutions is that the legislative, executive and judicial departments shall remain separate and distinct from each other.

"But if the judiciary had the power it claims, to set aside the statuted approval of the Executive then that department has an absolute veto which even the unanimous vote of both houses of the lawmaking department cannot overcome. The separation of the three departments of government no longer exists.

"We should not delude ourselves with the idea that the people govern in this country and that through their Congress and State Legislatures they shape their own destinies, when in truth and fact they cannot pass a single statute of any kind or nature however urgently demanded unless the statute shall meet the approval of the lawyers who happen at the time to compose the highest court.

Five Lawyers Can Halt Country.

"Five lawyers, staid, venerable, conservative, and by reason of their years, not unnaturally averse to new measures, can at will bring any movement of the people or Congress to an imperative halt. Ninety millions must instantly stand still at their command."

'No American Or Other Could Make Me Happy,' Declares Miss Shonts

Sure Her Duke Loves Her for Self Alone; Says Father Is Reconciled.

Washington, Nov. 23.—Beaming with girlish enthusiasm, pretty, rosy-cheeked Theodora Shonts, who is a guest of Mrs. Richard Reid Rogers, discussed her plans for her wedding to the Duc de Chaulnes.

Miss Shonts laughed heartily when asked why none of her family was at the Pier when her titled fiance sailed for Paris.

"What a joke," she said. "As if I should let him go without seeing the very last of him. I rode down the dock with my fiance and we decided it was best for me to remain in the carriage.

"I smiled when I saw the Duc de Chaulnes had said that papa was easy. Now he could not have said that, for he knows too well that papa was not easy.

That Miss Shonts will become a Roman Catholic is a probability, for the event that the couple are not given a special dispensation from the Pope so that they may be married in the church, rather than disappoint her fiance, Miss Shonts will accept the Roman Catholic church.

"My father is perfectly reconciled, for he now knows that I am going to become the wife of a cultivated man who is devotedly fond of me; for myself and alone.

"I know we shall be the happiest two in the world and why shouldn't we be?

"Of course, there has been a lot of talk about unhappy international marriages, but you must remember that the people don't hear of the happy ones. There is no reason in the world why an American girl should not be just as happy with a French Duc' as she is with an American man—that is if they are married just because they love each other.

"My duc is marrying me first because he happened in the order of things to find me congenial and to his tastes. I am to marry him for the same reason. There is no American man or any other in the world who could make me happy, so there!

"That isn't disloyal to America either for I am and always will be an American girl and I love it."

"At all events I am going to marry the duc, no mater whether the public likes it or not. They will not have to bear the blame if we make a mistake. But I haven't and our marriage will prove that all the 'I told you so's' in the world don't count when the two right people meet."

Frank P. Sargent, Head of Immigration Bureau, Stricken by Apoplexy

Washington Physicians Believe Well-Known Departmental Chief Has Fair Chance to Recover.

The critical illness of Frank P. Sargent, Commissioner General of Immigration, is announced in a special dispatch to the Boston American. His physicians diagnose his illness as apoplexy, but say that he has a fair chance for recovery. He was stricken Thursday night on his return from New York to Washington.

Commissioner Sargent is very well known in Boston, and when here only two weeks ago announced that he was to recommend a new immigrant station for Boston, to cost $25,000.

He has had a remarkable career. Born in Vermont, he went West when seventeen years of age and enlisted in the Sixth United States Cavalry, stationed in Arizona. After three years he became an engine wiper at Phoenix, and later a fireman.

Joining the Brotherhood, he rapidly rose in its official ranks until he was chosen grand master.

His executive ability was so noticeable that President McKinley offered him a place as civil service commissioner, but the Brotherhood of Firemen refused to accept his resignation.

In 1902 President Roosevelt appointed Sargent Commissioner-General of Immigration, and the department is now considered a model among government bureaus.

MORGAN CONFERENCE AT CAPITAL KEPT SECRET

Plan sfor Government Bank Discussed During Talk on Finances With President.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Washington, Nov. 23.—Complete silence enveloped those who participated in the financial conferences of Friday night when seen to-day. There was no statement from the White House. J. P. Morgan and George F. Baker returned to New York at five o'clock and before they departed they refused to say a single word in addition to the meagre announcement made late Friday night. Secretary Cortelyou remained behind closed doors all day and denied himself to all newspaper men.

Mr. Morgan rose early to-day and called upon Assistant Secretary of State Bacon. After an automobile ride he called at the treasury department and was closeted with Secretary Cortelyou for over an hour. When he left the treasury department he drove directly to the railroad station and took the train for New York.

Gossip in Washington.

Washington is humming with gossip about the visit, but no real news has been officially furnished. It is known that Mr. Morgan and Mr. Baker discussed the details of the issue of the certificates of indebtedness, but this was only one of the many things discussed.

It is known that the feeling of resentment against the banking interest of the country entertained by the administration was expressed to Mr. Morgand and Mr. Baker. It is believed that Mr. Morgan and Mr. Baker made representations to the President that so far as they were concerned and effort would be made to eliminate the methods now in force by the bankers and which has caused serious disapproval from the White House.

Nothing official was furnished as to the plan under consideration for the establishment of a centeral government bank of issue. When Secretary Cortelyou was asked for further details, he sent out word that he had nothing to say at the present time.

Plan Federal Bank.

It is known that Secretary of the Treasury, the administration leaders and Senators Hansborough of North Dakota, who is drafting a bill for the establishment of such a bank, have been in touch with financial experts both here and abroad on the subject. The working out of the details for the establishment of such a bank would take much time and care. The banking laws of the various States would have to be scrutinized and a uniform and equitable arrangement reached by co-operation with the financial and business interests of the country.

There is authorative knowledge that such a plan is under consideration, and the attitude of the bankers of the country as outlined in the American, with the resultant dissatisfaction in administration circles, has given great impetus to the proposed plans.

HUNDREDS, IN PANIC, FLEE FACTORY CRASH

Cylinder Head, Blown From Engine, Smashes Down Wall of Big Brockton Shop.

Brockton, Nov. 23.—With a crash and a roar that was heard for a great distance in every direction, the cylinder head of the big engine in factory No. 1 of the T. D. Barry & Company plant in Court street, blew out to-day, tearing down a section of the wall of the building and causing the factory to be closed down for the rest of the day. Many persons narrowly escaped injury.

The explosion caused the greatest excitement, hundreds of employes of the Barry company rushing out into the street, and great crowds hastening to the scene from other parts of the town.

A few seconds before the great steel head of the cylinder was hurled through the wall, breaking into fifty pieces, so great was the impact, Charles Brown, foreman of the finishing room, had been standing directly in its pathway. He had just stepped aside when the explosion occurred.

Engineer A. H. Vaughan also had a narrow escape from death or terrible injury.

The accident was caused by the big crank's breaking on the return stroke and thus allowing the piston and connecting rod to fly against the cylinder head with full force, breaking it.

Roosevelt to Ask Congress For Four New Battleships

President's Message Urges Construction of Monster Sea Fighters.

Washington, Nov. 23.—President Roosevelt is said to have recommended in his message to Congress the building of four new battleships, more powerful than any now under construction. It was thought he would suggest at least half a dozen port cabins, and thus create a fleet to take the place of Admiral Evans's squadron, which leaves the East next month to look things over out on the Pacific Coast.

With the thousands who will need employment after the Atlantic fleet leaves for the Pacific waters, it is argued that the country at large and the navy will be benefited. This is said to have been brought to Mr. Roosevelt's attention and to have influenced him in his decision.

CARUSO PROSECUTOR DEAD.

Woman Jumps Into Harbor from Ferry, Rescued by Sailors

Placed Under Arrest with Man Who Declared He Was Her Husband.

When the South ferry boat was nearing its East Boston slip at 10:45 last night, Mrs. Clara Milano, one of the passengers, jumped overboard. The other passengers shouted and screamed and became greatly excited. This attracted the attention of Dennis J. Healey and William Brown, sailors aboard the steamer Winifredian, which was lying at her berth near the ferry slip.

Healey and Brown jumped into the water and pulled Mrs. Brown to the edge of the slip, where they were assisted in getting her out of the water. Then the police took a hand and Mrs. Milano and a man giving his name and address as James Milano of No. 101 Liverpool street, East Boston, and claiming to be the woman's husband, were both locked up in Station 7 on charges of intoxication.

SEEK TO PROVE MRS. BRADLEY SANE BY TORN LETTER

PROSECUTION'S BIG CARD

Senator Brown's Epistles Tell of Devotion to Woman Who Avenged Wrong.

WOMEN FILL COURT ROOM

Fair Prisoner Bears Up Under Strain—Third Week of Trial Opens To-Morrow.

By Viola Rodgers.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—A staggering blow will be dealt the defence in the trial of Mrs. Annie M. Bradley for killing Senator Brown, next week, when letters will be read to the jury written by Mrs. Bradley and afterward torn up, which were found in the waste paper basket in her room at the Raleigh Hotel, after the killing of Senator Brown.

They were written on that hotel stationery and they have been pasted together and will be damaging evidence against the woman's plea that when she shot Brown she did not know what she was doing. In these letters, which were written to Mrs. Lufkins and Mrs. Corry of Salt Lake, Mrs. Bradley wrote:

"I am sending letters written to Senator Brown by Mrs. Annie Adams, mother of Maude Adams, the actress. Please preserve them if any defence should be necessary on account of my rashness."

When asked about the letters, George B. Hoover, attorney for the defence, said:

"We, of course, have knowledge of the preservation of these fragments of letters written by Mrs. Bradley. She acknowledged that they are written in her own handwriting, but she does not recall when or how she came to write them.

Further Evidence of Insanity.

They only prove the more clearly we feel that she was insane at the time she wrote them and I cannot see that their reading before the jury will in any way convince them that Mrs. Bradley contemplated murdering Mr. Brown. At least that is the way our side feel about it, although doubtless the prosecution look upon it as a trump card."

Mr. Hoover feels confident of his client's freedom.

"No jury but must be impressed by the charm, the intelligence, the actual worth of our client," he said further, "for Mrs. Bradley is a woman of no common clay. She is a woman qualified in every way to adorn any circle of life. That will stand here in good stead in this case when it comes before the jury, I believe. The only thing to be feared is a disagreement, but we hardly anticipate such a thing."

Mr. Hoover says that Monday would be devoted to the reading of several more observations of Brown's letters and that experts—the alienists—will be put on the stand to give their opinion upon the hypothetical question. "In any probabilities our case will be closed by Monday night," continued Mr. Hoover.

"It will be perhaps three days more before the case goes to the jury. I do not think they will be out long. Mrs. Bradley spent a quiet day at the jail to-day, reading and writing to many Western friends. She ate well and when seen said that she felt assured of her victory in the case."

"I am confident that no jury could convict me after the testimony that has and is yet to be offered in my behalf," said Mrs. Bradley. "I am weary of the long strain, but intend to keep myself together and not to collapse, because I cannot do so for my children's sake."

Among the letters to be read on Monday are the following characteristic letters Senator Brown wrote to Mrs. Bradley:

Brightest Woman in World

"May 28, 1902.

"Dearest and Brightest: While you are the brightest woman in the world, it seems impossible for me to make myself understood and understand. Are you living in Santa Monica or in Los Angeles; which, you neglect to state. You seem to be everywhere. Your code is more trouble than it is worth. I cannot and have not read correctly a single telegram since you sent new book. Your telegram just received says children are at 55 Figerro street, but whether in Los Angeles or Egypt does not appear. Where in —— is Figerro street?"

You asked me last night to wire you at once. I got telegram at 9 p. m. I answered that it was "Too late." A telegram asking what I meant by 'toolate' meant too late to answer by day dispatch. Rub your bright wit with a brick and you will perhaps see a brick wall big enough at least to let us know in what city, town, state, nation, globe, you imagine you live in.

"You told me you thought of moving, moving, moving. Did you ever think of not moving for ten minutes—but where and from where and why, God only knows. Whence we came, who can tell whither are we going? Who knows?

"Love and Impatience."

"I am out of patience with the lack of appreciation of the situation. If you could only be here and see how unintelligible all of your telegrams are you would appreciate why I can be out of patience, or without being angry. I know you do not mean it and I do not mean to be ugly and that there is nothing to interfere with our loving in all this, but it is exasperating to have to drive an idea into the brightest brain in the world with a sledge hammer.

"With truest love and impatience.

"YOUR OWN."

"Friday, 9 P. M., Oct. 3, 1902.

"Dearest Dolly:—What possessed you to think any promise had been ever hinted? I have made none. Madame says she will send us both to the penitentiary. She is very bitter. The only talk about compromise is the imagination of the reporters. Train late. I got in at seven, tired, sick, disheartened, faint and feverish, found your telegram and two letters. I hasten

In the [illegible] of the stealthy shadow that is [illegible] John, eighty-three years of age, [illegible] Jarius, who wooed and won the pretty Spencer girl whose love [illegible] years ago, has [illegible] at [illegible] the woman who was [illegible] estrangement [illegible].

John [illegible] is smitten unto death. For three days and three nights he lay [illegible] in his old home on the Wood [illegible] Jarius Wood's wife, no [illegible] there was an unwonted quiet [illegible] they never visited, sent her [illegible] there to inquire. That visit ended [illegible] quarrel, for Jarius saw that [illegible] was near.

Meet at Sweetheart's Home.

Fifty-three years ago John and Jarius were prosperous farmers. Jarius had a petty quarrel with John. Jarius went to Boston and made money in the hardware and [illegible] business. Returning to [illegible] of a mortgage on the old homestead and entered into the grocery business [illegible] own. Differences between the brothers were settled.

[illegible] to a pretty Spencer [illegible] Saturday night he visited his sweetheart. Soon Jarius was found to [illegible] visits to Spencer on Wednesday [illegible]. The two brothers did not know they were seeking the hand of the same girl. They seldom discussed their love affairs.

One [illegible] the brothers accidentally met at the house of the woman they both loved. She [illegible] Jarius as the man she really loved.

Parted for Fifty-Three Years.

Jarius had lost money in his grocery business, and John became the owner of the old homestead. He turned his brother from [illegible] and took an oath never to speak to him again.

Jarius married the Spencer girl and settled down on the adjoining farm to the Wood homestead, not fifty rods from where his brother lived.

For fifty-three years not a word passed between [illegible]. Jarius often came to his brother's [illegible] in times of need, but no words were spoken until the reconciliation now.

The Woods live three miles from any other farm. To reach it an old Indian trail from East Brookfield must be followed to the base of Tage Mountain. It is located at a spot where [illegible] says an [illegible] den [illegible] anger [illegible] upon the devil to push the mountain [illegible] of being the devil's kitchen, hence its name.

McLaughlin, when just a young man, was annoyed [illegible] sharp pain in his leg. He was [illegible] at the time, and upon investigation found an abrasion of the skin. To him it appeared but the mark of the [illegible] of a thorn. It seemed [illegible] McLaughlin suffered agonies, which he attributed to physical ailments.

REBATE CHECKS? YES MONEY? NAY, NAY

REDEMPTION IS REFUSED

Passengers on the New York, New Haven & Hartford are victims of an unpublished rule of the company, by which it refuses to cash rebate checks when the conductor's punch runs into two station names, according to a complaint made to-day by D. de Lara Fibel, a Philadelphia chemist. Mr. Fibel arrived in Boston to-day and charged that he had only been able to cash one rebate check out of ten during the past two weeks.

He made the further complaint that one of the company's agents in the South station refused to give him full redemption value for a ticket not entirely used because his train was held up by a wreck.

Tells His Own Story

The rebate check rule was evidently made so as to prevent conductors from confusing punch marks, thereby not showing clearly to the company the amount they collect in a cash fare. But Mr. Fibel declares that this rule is not made known to the passenger, and that he is the victim of an unreasonable procedure. Here is his story, as told to a Sunday American reporter:

"I left New York Thursday for Lowell. I purchased a ticket for Lowell via Fall River, for which I paid $3.55, the regular fare. At Taunton we were told that we could not go on, as there had been a wreck on that division of the road, and the station master advised me to come into Boston. I asked him if my ticket would be all right and he said yes.

"When I got on the train the conductor refused to accept my ticket and demanded that I pay a cash fare. I paid the cash fare, which amounted to eighty cents. The conductor told me that I could redeem my ticket at the redemption office at the South Station.

"At the redemption office in this city I told my story and showed the clerk there how the New Haven road was unable to take me to Lowell over its division to that point. I also showed him that it had cost me $4.35 to get to Boston. He figured it up on the back of my ticket and reached the same result that I did. He then agreed that as the fare to Boston was only $2.85 from New York that there was $1.70 due me.

Is Offered One Dollar

"Before paying me he consulted with the passenger agent in the rear part of the office. This gentleman told the clerk to offer me a dollar. The clerk did, but I refused. He consulted with his superior again and this time was instructed to offer me $1.25. I refused again telling the clerk that I was not there to accept any offers, but to get the sum due me on the ticket in whole or not at all.

"I was refused the $1.70 that the clerk admitted was due me and rather than accept a portion of what I thought was equitable and right, I left in disgust.

I then went to the regular ticket window to cash the rebate that I had received when I paid a cash fare from Taunton. The clerk there refused to do so because the conductor's punch instead of cutting out the name Taunton, was half way between the name Taunton and the station above. I was told that the road would not redeem a rebate unless the station from which the fare was paid was clearly indicated by the punch.

I wasn't much surprised at this because the same thing happened to me twice before this week, once at Port Chester and once at Stamford. I can say truthfully that in the past two weeks, out of the ten rebates that I have received, I have been able to cash but one. It would almost seem that the conductors were instructed to so punch the rebates that the road wouldn't have to redeem them."

Mr. Fibel resides at No. 1,838 Sapa street, Philadelphia.

GOVERNOR'S ACTS FOUGHT BY MILITIA

Formal Protest Made Against Guild's Application of Dick Law.

MANY OFFICERS LOSE JOBS

Objections by certain officers of the State Militia to some applications of the new Dick (national) law by Governor Guild, resulting in these officers being deprived of their former status in the militia, have crystallized into a legal protest now submitted to the Governor.

Under the provisions of the adoption of the Dick law a reorganization of the militia went into effect. By its provisions many officers found themselves put out of office. Some consulted Attorney Harry J. Jaquith, a well recognized authority on matters of this sort, who gave his opinion that such reconstruction of the militia by the Governor was unconstitutional on the whole, though part of the reconstruction eliminating the reorganization was legal.

The matter was brought to the Governor's attention last Tuesday by Councillor Edward P. Barry, who said he had reviewed the law with Mr. Jaquith and that he shared Mr. Jaquith's opinion as to the unconstitutionality of the radical changes made. Councillor Barry announced to the Executive that, until the Supreme Court of the State had passed on the question of constitutionality, he would refuse to vote for an appropriation called for under the reorganization.

DEDICATE BROOKLINE SCHOOL THURSDAY

Archbishop O'Connell to Officiate at Exercises at St. Mary's Parochial School Building.

The dedication of St. Mary's Parochial School of the parish of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Mary of the Assumption, Linden and Harvard streets, Brookline, on Thanksgiving morning, promises to be one of the most important and popular ceremonies of that day.

The splendid new school was erected at a cost of $100,000. The Rev. Father William T. McManus, the rector, whose zeal and unflagging effort resulted in the erection of the school, will have general charge of the ceremonies of the day, while Archbishop William H. O'Connell will dedicate the new building.

The exercises are to begin at 8:30 in the morning in the church building, while the ceremony of dedication will take place at 9 in Parochial School Hall. A grand mixed chorus will render the "Viva Pio Decimo." The blessing of the building by the Archbishop will follow and then he will deliver an address. The chorus will then sing "To Thee, O Country," and the pastor will deliver the closing address.

An evening entertainment is to be given in the school hall in the form of an original drama in four acts, entitled "Down in Maine," which has been carefully prepared by the stage managers, Thomas P. Carroll, James P. Comerford and William J. Dugan. Those who will take part are the Sunday school teachers and members of the Y. M. A. The entertainment is to be given two nights on Thursday and Friday, November 28 and 29, under the direction of Charles J. Harrod.

The cast of characters is as follows: Zeph Cummings, James F. McGrath; Ralph Cummings, William R. Kennaly; Neil Wentworth, Ferdinand J. Dawson; Bingle, Thomas J. Moran; Tomps, William F. Bradford; Mr. Holden, Daniel J. Devers; Jimpsey, Lewis H. McKenna; Mose Gossin, Francis J. Driscoll; Susie Cummings, Mary V. McGrath; Mrs. Cummings, Mary E. Handrahan; Keziah Mary E. McCarren of Keith's Theatre. The proceeds of the performances are to go toward defraying the expenses of stage fittings, so that other entertainments may be held there in the future.

COLUMBUS CHAPTER BUSY ON OPERETTA

Boston Chapter of the Knights of Columbus has fairly under way the preparations for the midwinter theatrical production, which during the past three or four years was so successful and to which the members of the order in and around this city look forward to with a deal of interest. A new operatic production is being rehearsed and every promise is held out that the forthcoming piece will surpass in every way any previous attempt.

Augustus Leahy has written the libretto and Professor John A. O'Shea, the organist of St. Cecilia's Church and one of the best known musicians in this city, has prepared the music. Rehearsals will all be under the direction of Robert Hurley, who for years has been associated with the theatrical productions of many of the leading colleges of New England.

CHARMING YOUNG WOMEN TO DRILL

SCHEDULED FOR DECEMBER

The third annual minstrel show and dance, under the auspices of King Solomon Lodge, No. 18, Knights of Pythias, to be given on the evening of December 2 at Potter and Howe Halls, No. 176 Huntington avenue, it is expected will far outshine the two previous entertainments given by the lodge.

Preparations are so well advanced for the coming entertainment that those in charge of the affair are not hesitating now in enthusiastically declaring that they are going to give the friends of the Pythians the surprise of their lives and a delightful evening that will never be forgotten.

Fair Maids to Drill.

The minstrel show is to be under the general direction of Maurice Daniels, who has managed the former affairs.

Of the many new features in the entertainment this year the opening chorus is counted upon as being the most pleasing. Nine young and pretty women, dressed to represent different nationalities, are to sing and participate in a drill and dance.

Another feature, and one that is bound to score a "screaming hit," will be Maurice Daniel's latest success, "Mr. Newly Wed," which will be sung by Woolf Cohen, assisted by six charming young women.

"Red Men" to Appear.

It is expected that this song will be even more of a "taker" than last year's hit, "The Stolen Kiss."

The "Red Men" are to be Messrs. Phil Meickelberg, Woolf Cohen, D. Rosenthal, H. B. Goldstein, D. Brisket and Joseph Greenman.

After the minstrel show there will be dancing upstairs in Howe Hall. The music is to be by Grabhaven's Orchestra.

SPY ON HELEN MAR FOR MRS. GOULD

Hunt Evidence That Young Woman Is Working in Interest of Husband.

IS GUEST AT COSTLY HOTEL

New York, Nov. 23.—It is reported in connection with the separation suit which Mrs. Howard Gould is bringing against her husband that Helen Mar, as she is called in public life, the young woman who was put through a severe grilling Thursday before Referee McClure, the master in the suit, is being closely watched by agents for Mrs. Gould's side, in an attempt to show that Miss Mar was brought to New York by the Gould interests.

Miss Mar was the chief witness at the examination, which was held behind closed doors. She was closely questioned by Clarence J. Shearn, Mrs. Gould's attorney.

The fact was brought out that Helen Mar and her present husband, Rohan Clensy, are now stopping in expensive apartments in the Hotel Majestic, which is an exclusive apartment house at Central Park West and Seventy-second street, whereas on former visits to this city she had been content with rooms at the Continental Hotel in Newark, which is a regular $2 a day hostelry.

Mr. Shearn seemed to be trying to establish the fact that Helen Mar was induced to come to New York at this time, the inference being that arrangements were made whereby she and her husband could be housed in the Majestic instead of the more remote Newark hotel.

Miss Mar, in testifying for Howard Gould, was asked to repeat conversations she alleged she had with Mrs. Gould—then Katherine Clemmons—eight years ago. In these conversations, it has been alleged, Miss Clemmons made admissions concerning herself and Colonel W. F. Cody (Buffalo Bill).

Mr. Shearn, in his grilling examination, made her trace her own history step by step through past years. It was learned after the hearing that Miss Mar testified her maiden name was Helen White, that she was first married to George Brown and later to Ronan Clensy, her present husband. She said she had been to America half a dozen times, but admitted that on the previous trips she had put up in Newark.

LIVE RIGHT TO LIVE LONG, SAYS MAN 93

Worcester, Nov. 23.—Daniel Brewster Hayes is ninety-three years old. He attributes his old age and vigorous health to his habits through life.

Mr. Hayes's receipt for living to an old age is:

> Don't smoke; don't drink intoxicating [illegible]; don't eat between meals, and [illegible] be regular with them; don't fail to take daily constitutional walks.

[illegible] who is a relative of President Rutherford B. Hayes, has smoked but two cigars in [illegible] life, and his strongest drink has been sweet apple cider.

A Voice From The Stomach

A Bloodless Fight Between a Tablet and a Habit—The Tablet Wins.

At the age of 22 Clarence had good digestion. He had gastric juice that could dissolve doughnuts and turn apple pie into good blood corpuscles.

At the age of 24 he began to be profuse about the waist and lean backwards. He also began to cultivate several chins. In his new-found pride he began to think it his duty to gorge himself on everything, the good and the bad, for appetite feeds on appetite—and every good thing is abused.

At the age of 26 Clarence married and went to boarding. On top of all this he attended oyster suppers and wine dinners, which reduced the size of his collar from 16½ to 15. With still abiding faith in the strength of his stomach he gulped his meals and chewed them afterwards.

At the age of 28 Clarence began to hear an inward voice—a warning from the stomach. After each meal he would feel bloated—and belching became a habit.

He began to be a light eater—and a heavy thinker. He tried to think out a cure, for now he would sit down at his meals absolutely disgusted at the thought or sight of anything to eat.

He would sit down at his meals without the trace of an appetite, just because it was time to eat.

He would often feel a gnawing, unsatisfied "still hungry" feeling in his stomach, even after he was through eating, whether his meal was well cooked or not.

And he suffered a good many other things with his stomach that he could not explain, but that made him grouchy, miserable, out-o'-sorts and generally sour on everybody and everything.

Finally he read an account, something like this, about the truly wonderful results obtained from Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach trouble, dyspepsia, and so on. He bought a 50c box at the drug store, and took the whole box. When he started he had little faith—and less appetite. When he finished he had absolute faith—and more appetite and more good cheer. Things began to taste different and better to him.

Now he has no more dyspepsia, no more indigestion, no more loss of appetite, brash, irritation, burning sensation, heartburn, nausea, eructations, bad memory, or loss of vim and vigor.

Remember, one ingredient of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest for you 3,000 grains of food, just as it did for Clarence.

This relieves your stomach of the work of digesting until your stomach can get strong and healthy again. Your stomach has been overworked and abused. It's fagged out. It needs a rest.

Let Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do the work of your stomach. You will be surprised how fine you'll feel after eating and how lusciously good everything will taste to you.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

WOMEN FRIENDS NOW FOES.

BUNGALOWS SOLVE PROBLEM OF SUBURBAN CONVENIENCES

Winthrop, Mattapan and Everett Experiencing Big Boom in Realty Sales for Homes.

Any one who is willing to put aside a small sum of money each week can own a home. Material and labor are commanding high prices, it is true, but new ideas in building have occasioned the erection of inexpensive houses which are comfortable and within the means of the average wage-earner.

Colonial bungalows are now being extensively built in Winthrop. These are a great improvement over the old style of cottage dwellings. People are looking for something new in the building line, and these bungalows are moderate in price and are already in great demand. Seven bungalows of unique design, located in a new section of Dorchester, were placed upon the market a short time ago and sold rapidly.

They offer great conveniences for small families. They contain six rooms and bath, are two stories high and sold for $3,200.

Bungalows in Favor.

While originally a bungalow was a temporary shelter, suitable for a white man in a tropical climate, and then came to mean a Summer outing place, it is now made to stand for a compact home with every modern convenience adapted for all seasons and making housekeeping easy.

The bungalows of India are for the most part build of unbaked bricks and covered with thatch, having in the centre a hall, the whole being encompassed by an open veranda. But in this climate the form of the cottage dwelling has been made over and the style of the bungalow with marked improvements has been kept in view.

The colonial bungalows now being erected in Winthrop make it possible for every one to have a cozy, convenient and attractive home and something different from the conventional style of building small houses.

Selling for $2,500.

They cost $2,500. This includes the price of the land as well as the grading of the walks around the dwelling. The lot comprises 5,000 feet. The outside measurements are a little over 25x25. The three rooms on the first floor are dining room, 12x13, parlor, 12x13, and kitchen 12x12. There are two bay windows and pantry and china closets. The hall and stairways are of good width. Three chambers on the second story measure 12x13, with bath and excellent closet room. These bungalows will be sought by people who are looking for a home a short distance from any city, and being so conveniently arranged they will appeal to families who are accustomed to do their own work.

Offer Easy Payments.

They are near the salt water and in Summer time will be specially attractive. They are built substantially, and in Winter can be made as warm and comfortable as the ordinary flat.

Those who are looking for an opportunity to escape the flat and its requirements and have been looking for single houses will be pleased with this new style of residence.

The cash payment of $500 and $23 a month will make it possible for many to secure their own home in this way.

A great many people who build are hampered by building too much. They try to emulate the example of the well-to-do. Consequently they get discouraged when the burden of payment presses them too severely, because they have gone beyond their means. The happiness that one can get out of a home is by building only such as one can comfortably pay for and maintain without sacrifice.

Simple Suburban Homes.

It costs no more to build a beautiful home than an ugly one, and a very picturesque little home in the suburbs is what may be called an ideal one.

Its utter unconventionality with its straightforward expression of simple needs is what must impress the buyer of average means. When it is simple, as these bungalows are, it reduces the expense and puts within the reach of every wage earner a home which increases its value because it is simple and economical. There should be just as much care in the selection of a home and within means of the purchaser as there is in other avenues of life. The times are ripe when everyone should own his home, and the opportunity increases with the different plans put out to make this a possibility for all.

Johnson, the builder, whose office is in Tremont Temple, has inaugurated the device of popularizing the new style of bungalows which are destined to support many of the old conventional ways of building moderately priced single dwellings, and reports a great demand for them.

Everett Has Boom.

Everett is constantly improving and the sale of houses on Elm street up to Vernon street is steady and firm. Many dwellings on Waverly street, between Hancock and Warren have been remodelled. C. E. Jennings and Adkins, as well as Thompson's agency, have sold more property to home buyers than ever before in their business experience. When the elevated is extended through Everett to Malden, greater demand for homes may be looked for. Everett is near the beaches and has a beautiful boulevard, besides excellent schools and two public libraries. Its manufacturing interests are large and increasing and they afford employment for thousands of hands. Even the marshlands, which brought twenty-five years ago twenty dollars an acre, have been utilized and are now valued from $4,000 to $5,000 an acre.

People who formerly invested in the stock market have turned their attention to investments in real estate in this locality. Real estate may be hard to sell rapidly in some quarters, but many more are willing to-day to invest in it than formerly, believing though it may give not a very high percentage, yet is more steady than other avenues of investments.

Three-Flat Houses.

The building of three-family houses with fifteen rooms and all modern improvements is noticed in the newer localities of Everett. These houses are good investments. They are up to date in every detail, with bay windows, separate entrances, separate cellars, granolithic walks, sewer, gas, hard wood floors, three copper pressure boilers, ranges, shades and everything complete, and are sold for $6,500. The rent is $780 a year. They yield easily fifteen per cent on the investment. Other houses not located on the corner of the street bring $6,000, and rent for $58 a month.

A cash payment of $1,500 and 6 per cent is asked.

These houses are all tastefully arranged, and not one of them is flat roofed. They are specially attractive for investors, those who are seeking a good and substantial return for their money.

The increased confidence put in the real estate market as a place to invest money is showing itself more prominently each month.

In the ready sales of new property in Everett and also in the acquisition of property at the South End of Boston this is appearing.

Many men of wealth are turning their attention to undeveloped property here and there, and consider their opportunity better in getting good returns for their money invested than formerly.

A great boom in real estate may be expected at any time to meet this increased confidence on the part of investors in this type of investment.

There was a time when real estate as an investment was looked at rather slightingly because of its many apparent discouragements, but these in the face of other investments and their uncertainties have called attention once more to the settled income of real estate and many houses now building and in contemplation of building in Everett afford a splendid opportunity to get from 15 to 20 per cent.

Bungalows in Mattapan

Mattapan has had the past week some special interest awakened by the plan put forth, "If you own your own home, your future rent is paid." Here a bungalow may be built from simple plans from $1,650 to $2,450, according to size, finish, area of lot and location. Lots range from 3,000 to 14,000 square feet.

Lot and house	$1,650
Cash payment	450
	$1,200
Interest per annum	$60
Taxes, per annum	24
Water rates, per annum	15
Insurance, per annum	3
Year's total	$102

This is $8.50 a month.

At this rate, everyone ought to own a home of their own.

Real Estate Sales Brisk Despite Money Market Stringency

Notwithstanding the reported stringency of the money market, real estate continues to boom and besides a good week's business reported by the brokers there are rumors of other big sales already under way.

These transactions include a big hotel, a business block and a dwelling, all in the Back Bay, a business property in the heart of the retail section and several important transfers in the South and West Ends.

Telegraphic advices state that the owners of a big Framingham estate are considering an offer from a well known United States Senator who, if his price is accepted, contemplates heavy expenditures for improvements to make an ideal Summer home.

Charcoal Stops Gas On Your Stomach.

Trial Package Sent Free.

Charcoal, pure, simple charcoal, absorbs 100 times its own volume of gas. Where does the gas go to? It is just absorbed by the charcoal,—the gas disappears and there is left a pure, fresh, sweet atmosphere, free from all impurities and germs.

That's what happens in your stomach when you take one or two of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful purifiers science has yet discovered.

You belch gas in company, sometimes, by accident, greatly to your own humiliation. That is because there is a great amount of gas being formed in your stomach by fermenting food. Your stomach is not digesting your food properly. Gas is inevitable. Whenever this happens, just take one or two of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges right after eating, and you will be surprised how quickly they will act. No more belchings; no more sour risings. Eat all you want and what you want, and then if there is any gas going to be formed, one of these wonderful little absorbers, a Stuart Charcoal Lozenge, will take care of all the gas.

And it will do more than that. Every particle of impurity in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away by the charcoal. No one seems to know why it does this, but it does, and does it wonderfully. You notice the difference in your appetite, general good feeling, and in the purity of your blood, right away.

You'll have no more bad taste in your mouth or bad breath, either from drinking, eating or smoking. Other people will notice your bad breath quicker than you will yourself. Make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, so when you talk to others you won't disgust them. Just one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges will make your breath sweet, and make you feel better all over for it. You can eat all the onions and odorous foods you want, and no one can tell the difference.

Besides, charcoal is the best laxative known. You can take a whole boxful and no harm will result. It is a wonderfully easy regulator.

And then, too, it filters your blood,—every particle of poison or impurity in your blood is destroyed, and you begin to notice the difference in your face first thing,—your clear complexion.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made from pure willow charcoal, and just a little honey is put in to make them palatable, but not too sweet.

They will work wonders in your stomach, and make you feel fine and fresh. Your blood and breath will be purified.

We want to prove all this to you, so just send for a free sample today. Then after you get it and use it, you will like them so well that you will go to your druggist and get a 25c box of these Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Talks on Teeth
By
G. GORDON MARTIN
(INCORPORATED)

TEETH TROUBLES ENDED

The Alveolar Method of restoring missing teeth without the aid of plates or ordinary bridge work insures the man or woman who has this remarkable work put in for them against further teeth troubles of any kind.

Think of that!

No more toothache, no more sore gums, caused by wobbly, ill-fitting partial plates, no more torture from those bridges set in between the teeth, which are constantly pushing the pier teeth away when the victim bites on them without thinking; no more teeth troubles. From the very day the Alveolar teeth are put in place and anchored solid as nature's teeth (and just as good looking and comfortable as ever the natural teeth were) the patient begins to use them.

One man left our offices one afternoon about five o'clock and within an hour was enjoying the first beefsteak he had eaten in years.

Another wanted corn on the cob and another to bite into a big, juicy apple—all of them have some form or other in the eating line, which they wish to enjoy again, after being forced to go without for years because they had no teeth to chew with.

We will give you the teeth and guarantee our work with a substantial guarantee that means something.

The Alveolar Method is entirely different from anything else offered and is the one great advance in dental science of the present century.

Partial plates and the "between teeth" bridges are makeshifts. They simply fill up the gaps between the teeth; the former are everlastingly coming out at inopportune times and the latter are always sore and insanitary, as food lodges between and underneath them and decays there, breeding disease and foul breath.

As is usual the success of this method has excited the cupidity of a swarm of unscrupulous dentists who have boldly stolen our advertising matter and inserted another name for the inventor, Dr. Martin.

We require two or more teeth in either jaw to work from, and given these, can give you a perfect set, upper and lower, but if you allow one of these impostors to experiment on what you have left we can do nothing for you. So, don't be misled into getting a counterfeit. The genuine Alveolar Method is only to be obtained in one of our four offices in Chicago, New York, Boston or Kansas City.

If you live near enough to one of these four offices come for a free examination and diagnosis of your teeth by one of our examining dentists.

If you can't do this at once, send for our free book, "Alveolar Dentistry," which explains the method in detail.

A final word of warning:

Teeth don't grow better, but on the contrary, grow worse every day they are let alone. Bad teeth or no teeth breed dyspepsia and other evils, so, don't put off your visit. The work is painless, we don't bore into the gums, don't implant the new teeth, don't cause you any discomfort. Nothing about the Alveolar Method to fear, and once it is completed, your teeth troubles are ended

FEVERISH ACTIVITY AS BATTLESHIPS' CRUISE NEARS.

The Vermont Will Leave Boston Harbor for the Pacific on Sunday Next.

JACKIES IN DAILY DRILLS

The Illinois, Missouri and New Jersey Will Follow on Monday and Tuesday.

ONE week from to-day the magnificent new battleship Vermont bids farewell to Boston for many months and heads down Massachusetts Bay for New York on the first lap of her 13,000-mile journey to the Pacific with the rest of Uncle Sam's giant fighting machines.

The Illinois, Missouri and New Jersey will follow her on Monday and Tuesday. The Kentucky puts into Boston from Portsmouth on December 1 for a day or two, and will rendezvous with the other battleships at Hampton Roads, Va., on the 8th

These five warships alone will carry over 3,500 officers and men. After a final review by the President, on December 16, "Fighting Bob" Evans will head for Cape Horn with his fleet, the most powerful ever taken around the globe

Scenes of Great Activity.

The scenes at the Charlestown Navy Yard during the final preparations for the trip are those of wonderful activity. Hundreds of jackies and officers flit here and there, making the big craft ready. Scores of drays roll ponderously along the wharves with boxes hurriedly loaded on the warships.

Painters daily skim along the sides of the ships, giving them new shining coats for the naval review. Carpenters work feverishly on the decks repairing the woodwork, and sailors bustle [illegible] big turrets and fighting tops polishing the mammoth rifles until they glisten in the sun

Amid all the bustle of preparation the discipline of the men exhibits clock-like precision, and the training work is not for [illegible] hours, working in relays, the members of the signal corps are seen industriously practising with the wigwag and blinker systems, showing that the practical instruction courses, which are to be a feature of the long cruise, have not been delayed until the ships head for the Western Ocean

Ridicule War Talk.

To illustrate the energies that are centred on the battleships, all work on the old cruiser New York, the Nashville and the Detroit is suspended temporarily. The former, the proud flagship of Admiral Sampson at the battle of Santiago, is now dismantled and almost unrecognizable. The hull, which of yore shone with white paint, is now looking rusty and mottled in only a priming coat of red ochre.

In striking contrast to the modern sea dogs of the twentieth century is the ancient relic of 1812, the Constitution. The old frigate, now rebuilt, looks practically as she did when she sailed out of Boston in 1797, the queen of the United States navy and later the conqueror of the Guerierre

Both, officers and men, are enthusiastic over the prospect of their long cruise around the world. The officers are exceedingly non-committal in speaking of the journey, and it is easy to see that the order has gone forth from Washington, "Mum's the Word."

"War with Japan is a dead issue," said Captain William P. Potter of the Vermont to a reporter for the Boston Sunday American, aboard his battleship last evening. Of course, it's an inspiring sight to see even these four battleships in the work of preparation for the Pacific cruise. But you want to come down to Hampton Roads on December 8 and see sixteen battleships"

Install Electric System.

One of the most important matters now under way at the yard is the installation of the electric fire control system. This device will allow the officers in charge of the great gun to regulate the fire off all of them from several stations throughout the ships by electric signals. Captain Snow, one of the most expert naval constructors in the service, is hurrying this work along and may be seen daily darting impatiently from one ship to the other.

All of the provisions for the cruise will be shipped at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, though some supplies are taken aboard here

An instance of the thoroughness of preparation is seen in the extra machinery to be taken. Piled up against the sides of the battleships are huge propellor blades, extras for use in an emergency. On every pier are dismantled machinery, hoisting cranes, etc., discarded and supplanted by new and stronger fittings.

The youngest and most active captains have been assigned to the Pacific fleet in preference to older men. Captain Potter, in charge of the Vermont, has recently been assistant chief of the Bureau of Navigation. Captain W. C. $1.50 Fiddle in Junk Shop a Stradivarius? Yes, Says W.L. Kelly

Roxbury Man Convinced That He Has Priceless Violin Made by Famous Old Timer

William L. Kelly, a well-known young Roxbury business man, is sure that the violin he picked up the other day in a Hampden street junk shop for $1.50 is a real Stradivarius. So sure is Mr. Kelly that he refuses to sell the instrument at any figure

An admirer of the violin and quite a player, Mr. Kelly saw the old instrument hanging in the shop. He dropped in, looked at the instrument, casually asked the price, and snapped it up when he found that he could get it for $1.50

When he got the old fiddle home Mr. Kelly tried it. Its tones were so full, rich and pure, and the timbre of the notes so rare that he was more than ever convinced that he had indeed one of the priceless 17th century violins from the hand of the great manufacturer of Cremona

I am truly loving you, but I find my table full of business and I am sick and worn out.

"Your Own A."

Remarkable Court Scene.

The scenes in the court room during the past week have been most remarkable. Mrs. Bradley spent two days and a half on the stand in her own behalf and made a star witness. In fact, it soon became evident that her club training and knowledge of parliamentary procedure stood her in good stead, for with all due respect to the attorneys and judge, Mrs. Bradley was undeniably [illegible] we betrayed

It was with ease that she walked [illegible] way of [illegible] with Arthur Brown. With natural dramatic ability and yet with [illegible] the slightest effort or attempt at [illegible] she told her story so vividly, so clearly, so [illegible] and with such well chosen words that everyone in the courtroom was enthralled with it as by the work of a master of dramatic art.

She carried the hearers back with her over the years she had spent with Arthur Brown; they suffered with her in her agonies and shared with her the few remembered joys that he had brought into her life. Her spirit was not broken. Proudly she answered the humiliating questions of the prosecutor who, to his credit, did his best to soften their dark meanings. [illegible] No one who heard her can doubt that, even when a slight deviation would have caused her less [illegible]

In a voice cultured, polished and as sweet as a monastery bell heard across the purple hills of twilight, the horrible details alternated. Occasionally, the dark head would move to and fro in emphasis of what she was saying and often when she thought her explanations were insufficient she voluntarily added more clarifying details to them.

And around this feast of a woman's [illegible] Stared by [illegible] was torn away by a [illegible] looked on unblushingly in its morbid curiosity.

Row after row, they stretched, in the big court room and their behaviour, their haste and eagerness to observe every facial expression of Mrs. Bradley, led them to a reprimand by Justice Stafford, who was obliged to announce that the next woman to crane her neck or rise in her chair, should be expelled from the court room.

Throne of Portugal's King Totters: Crown Prince Sides With Rebels

QUEEN AMELIE.

Heir to the Throne Banished From Court by Frightened King.

Lisbon, Nov. 23.—With Queen Amelia pleading with King Edward to aid in saving the throne for her husband, the jovial King Charles; with the crown prince banished from court for daring to oppose the regime of dictatorship inaugurated by his father; with Duke Miquel de Braganza, the pretender, plotting to return to Portugal and to effect a coup d'etat that would enable him to seize the crown, Portugal, at present, is resembling a seething volcano of revolutionary activity.

"Save your head before it is too late," is the sarcastic advice to King Charles in one of the many inflammatory circulars distributed [illegible] of the country [illegible] to take notice of the hint, or he may become the Louis XVI. of Portugal.

Terrorists at Work.

Months of arduous work on the part of [illegible] beginning [illegible] Charles was [illegible] but a [illegible] the city [illegible] of Lisbon, unless something unexpected happens.

Terror, this horror accompanying nearly every revolution, is making its appearance [illegible] government, as demanded by the people, and the tyranny, as upheld by the king and his prime minister, Franco, Portugal, today is in the shadow of death. But rather than submit to the demands of the people, the king is willing to drown them in rivers of blood.

While it is admitted that the dissolution of the Cortes about one year ago by the king was necessitated by the corruption which penetrated into every branch of the government, and that, were the politicians permitted to run things as they liked, the country would have been speedily brought to the verge of bankruptcy, it [illegible] that the [illegible] one of the many [illegible] on the Troops Are Still Loyal.

"We will not tolerate a Nicholas II in Portugal—our country shall never [illegible]," is the war cry of the opposition, and it is echoed in the "Down with the tyrant!" shouts of the populace, that sees in the revolution an escape from the burdensome taxation of the last few years.

The troops are still loyal; but even the most ardent supporters of the present regime admit that their loyalty is not of a stability that would insure safety to the reigning house, and that the King is not the leader who would inspire his followers to lay down their lives for him.

"Charles the Glutton" has been a familiar epithet in Portugal ever since the present [illegible] throne, and [illegible] does not add [illegible] prestige.

STOP DRINKING!

Orrine Destroys Desire for Drink
"How to Swear Off"

It was formerly customary for the habitual drinker to take the pledge regularly, sometimes once a year, and sometimes in every fit of remorse that followed his debauches and then break it.

But now it is gradually dawning on the world that pledges do not stop drunkenness. When a man takes a pledge voluntarily he expects to keep it. Every man expects to keep his word, and every broken pledge costs [illegible] many a heartache. But he can't help it. He fights as long as he can, then succumbs to the craving. AMHERST, THOUGH DEFEATED, MADE BROWN WORK HARD

Only One Touchdown in the First Half, and Bay State Boys Set a Hot Pace All the Way.

Special to the Boston American.

Providence, Nov. 23.—Amherst proved herself a worthy foe of Brown this afternoon, and, despite the 18–0 score the game was stubbornly fought through. Brown's first touchdown was made within five minutes of the start, the ball being fumbled by an Amherst man and secured by Hazard. McDonald was shoved over the line on third play. This was the only score made during the half, and though the ball was in Amherst's territory practically all the time, the Brown men were held every time they got within striking distance.

In the second half Amherst played around Brown for a few minutes, but the pace was [illegible] end runs by Mayhew, Regner and Pryor the ball was carried from Brown's twenty-five yard line for another touchdown. The final score was made on a [illegible] run of twenty-five yards by Regner. Brown just missed another [illegible] inches, [illegible] quarter, [illegible] being downed just [illegible]. He was dragged over the line, but [illegible] Williams disallowed the score.

Brown Quickly Scores

The game opened with [illegible] kicking to Keating who ran outside at eight yard line. The ball was lost to Brown on a fumble and McDonald was [illegible] for a touchdown. Hazard [illegible].

Shattuck kicked to Dennie who returned twenty yards. Mayhew [illegible] fifteen. Dennie [illegible] back kick, but lost the ball on a bad tackle by Smith. Amherst was forced to punt. Regner secured the ball, and on a fake punt, he was sent along for fifteen yards.

Brown found little trouble in making first down, but lost on a fumble. Again visitors punted, and Mayhew ran fifteen yards before being tackled. Runs by Dennie and Regner carried ball to Amherst's five-yard line, where the [illegible] held for downs. A forward pass [illegible] struck the ground and Mayhew got the ball and ran for a touchdown, but the score was not allowed.

Field Goal Failed.

Amherst was again forced to punt and by short gains the ball was slowly worked toward Amherst's goal line. A forward pass to Hazard netting a touchdown was disallowed on the grounds of its being used [illegible].

Shattuck punted out to Dennie, who made a fair catch on the thirty-eight yard line. McDonald's attempt at a goal failed. Brown recovered the punt and [illegible] worked the ball to the one-yard line where Amherst showed her staying qualities by holding for downs. This saved the visitors for the half ended with the ball in Brown's possession on the eight-yard line.

In the second half the Amherst men began to do things. They ripped off forward passes and onside kicks in rapid fashion and carried the ball dangerously near Brown's goal. They were held, however, [illegible] got the ball on the twenty-five yard line. Brown [illegible] the ball again when Regner [illegible].

[illegible] nothing but Brown. Mayhew [illegible] three ten yard runs, Regner [illegible] and Pryor was good for fifteen [illegible] tackle. A forward pass, Mayhew [illegible] Pryor netted twenty more and Pryor was shoved over for the second [illegible]. Amherst kicked over the line [illegible] from the twenty-five [illegible] Mayhew got an onside kick [illegible] worked ball [illegible] playing. Mayhew [illegible] twenty-five and then Brown [illegible] penalty, but an onside kick made up for this and from the twenty-five [illegible] Regner ran for the final touchdown of the game. Hazard [illegible] kicked off and Dennie [illegible] dropped the [illegible] Shattuck recovered it for Brown. A forward [illegible] dropped into an Amherst man's [illegible] dragged over his goal line, but the safety was not allowed. The summary:

FOGLER WINS TWO RACES AT PARK TRACK

Nat Butler Beats Jimmy Moran in Straight Heats by Narrow Margin.

Joe Fogler is the champion bike sprinter. He established this point last night at the Park Square indoor track when he won the mile handicap from the scratch and then the ten-mile open scratch race for professionals.

The real test came in the latter event, as Root gave the German the battle of his life, and only lost first place by a wheel. The finish was spectacular, as it was the wildest dash to the tape ever seen, and the result was an uncertain thing till Fogler flashed over the line. A blanket would have covered Fogler, Root and Hardy Downing, who was almost on even terms with Root.

The last mile of the race was so hot that more than half the store riders competing were forced to give up the fight and let the leaders settle the places. George Wiley won five of the mile prizes.

That Root wanted [illegible] badly was evident, as he was [illegible] of the mile [illegible] not willing to let Fogler [illegible] the honors.

Fogler started from scratch in the mile event and Root had twenty yards on him. The heat winners in the final bunched up in a few laps, and it was a scrap in the last lap. Fogler had the lead with Sherwood on his hind wheel. [illegible] dropped out, as he said he was not going to take chances of getting killed in the wild scramble for the prizes.

Mile handicap; amateur; trial heats—First heat won by [illegible] Connolly, 55 yards. Time, 2.25. Second, Hugh McFarland, 95 yards. [illegible] Second heat won by Tom Connolly [illegible] second, E. F. Goodrich, 85 yards; third, W. H. Bussey, 45 yards. Time, 2.21 2-5. Third heat won by G. O. Stillman, 80 yards; second, J. P. Collins, 100 yards; third, Joseph Curne, 30 yards. Time, 2.17 4-5. Final heat won by Tom Connolly; second, Joseph Cures; third, W. H. Bussy. Time, 2.15 4-5.

Mile handicap, professional, trial heats—First heat won by [illegible] Fogler, scratch; second, Walter Bardgett [illegible]; third, Root, 20 yards. Time—2.07 1-5. Second heat won by [illegible] Sherwood, 75 [illegible]; third, Hardy Downing, 30 [illegible]; fourth, George Wiley, 90 [illegible]. Time, 2.16 1-5. Final heat won by Joe Fogler [illegible] Sherwood, 75 yards; third, George Wiley [illegible] yards; fourth, Hugh McLean [illegible] yards. Time, 2.06.

Fifteen mile motor paced match race, Moran vs. Butler. First heat [illegible] won by Butler. Time [illegible] 5.37 3-5. Second heat won by Butler. Time [illegible].

KEYES TO MEET HURLEY.

Bert Keyes has another match on at New Haven. Jimmy Kelly signed him up to meet Battling Hurley at the college town on the afternoon of November 28, Thanksgiving Day. Promoters Bronson and [illegible] of New Haven and [illegible] manager of the [illegible] agreed to the [illegible] yesterday. The division of the purse will be taken up later. Hurley is a worthy opponent for Keyes, as he showed good form in previous bouts and in his bout with Rose O'Brien Wednesday night. Keyes and Hurley are two of the hardest hitters in their class in and around here, and as they are both game to the core, a great battle can be expected.

ASHLAND BELT IS NO MATCH FOR OUTCAST ON SPEEDWAY

Atho L. [illegible] Charley King Had a Lively [illegible] Five Heats Before [illegible] Won.

The [illegible] weekly matinee of the D[illegible] Club at Franklin Field speedway [illegible] was arranged by the [illegible] committee [illegible] the Outcast vs Ashland Belt [illegible] did the former take the [illegible] straight heats that several [illegible] proved far more interes[illegible].

It [illegible] mail for West[illegible] heat in 2:1[illegible], the fastest [illegible] after [illegible] considering [illegible], extremely merry [illegible]. There are not a few who believe [illegible] pacing champion of the [illegible] race committee to [illegible] Dalon and Ronda [illegible] Day matinee to prove the [illegible].

Fred B[illegible] says he no more than [illegible] the word [illegible] Ashland Belt before [illegible] found [illegible] against the [illegible] article [illegible], and that no matter [illegible] may say he will contin[illegible] is the fastest pacer racing at the Franklin Field speedway.

Altro L. Wins Hard Race.

Altro, H. and Charley King had a pitched battle of five heats before the judges could declare the winner. It certainly was one of the most exciting races seen [illegible] this year, and the black trotter [illegible] won the final heat by more than [illegible] head neck.

Another [illegible] was that between [illegible] and Edith J., though this was over in [illegible]. It was nip and tuck from [illegible] each trip, the winner always [illegible] question till up to passing the wire.

Job [illegible] headed another summary [illegible] over Helvetia, all of the trips being captured by narrow margins.

A. M. Johnson had not much bother in getting a blue with Rex over Maud M. It was Queen Crystal in three heats in the three [illegible] event with Prince of Monica and [illegible] Edith R. had the foot on W[illegible], not taking the chance of [illegible] a single trick. There was [illegible] of the Wilkes superiority over [illegible] though the latter succeeded in landing the fourth heat.

Miss Dreamer Was the Goods.

The two-year-old trotting race was not as exciting as was anticipated, J. M. E. Morrill having the goods in Miss Dreamer. C. C. [illegible] took into camp Budweiser [illegible] Helcamite had a thorny [illegible] in trying to beat Bunker [illegible] close enough at the [illegible] cause Fred B[illegible] or two which shows he was [illegible] far in the rear.

J. N. B[illegible] like a trojan in taking [illegible] with Good Boy in five heats [illegible] and the crowd were pleased [illegible] awarded the decision. [illegible] of the day was Harris' [illegible], Sunrise, the toughest nut in his class to crack in the Dorchester Driving Club.

Much [illegible] centers in the races of Thanksgiving [illegible] to know how Altro L., Rex and [illegible] come out, as the three have only a point and one-half between them for the season's prizes. Of course, the three will not meet in the same race, but it is sure the owner will keep tabs on what the race committee think is a fair horse to go again and not be partial to either of the horses. BAY STATE A. A. TO ENTERTAIN

The [illegible] committee of the Bay State [illegible] Association has planned [illegible] sessions for the [illegible] very near future. The first [illegible] meeting to be [illegible] at Hotel Oxford Saturday evening [illegible] McClintock of [illegible] [illegible]

GUNNER MOIR, WHO WILL FIGHT TOMMY BURNS IN LONDON ON DEC. 2

GUNNER MOIR TO COME HERE IF HE DEFEATS TOMMY BURNS

English Fighter Working Hard to Be Fit for Bout at National Sporting Club.

BY TAD.

Should Gunner Moir be successful in his little tilt with Tommy Burns at the National Sporting Club of London a week from Monday night, he will visit America and make a theatrical tour here extending through nineteen weeks and netting himself $25,000.

Moir, with his trainer and sparring partner, will come over immediately after the bout (providing he is a winner) with all expenses paid, and do a turn in the vaudeville houses.

Moir is simply flooded with offers for his services after the fight, and is working like a Trojan to cop the long end of the purse. The London Sporting Life, which has a man in the Moir training quarters, says that he is the hardest working [illegible] ever seen over there, and if condition has much to do with the result of the battle Moir is certainly a winner.

Moir Training Hard.

He walks twenty miles on the road every other day. He does not run or sprint as some boxers do, but merely plods [illegible] his own quiet way. Upon his return to the gym he gets a rub down, and [illegible] sweater [illegible] upon [illegible] standing [illegible] his hands a hundred times. This [illegible] gets up and taps the light punching bag for twenty minutes, and next turns his attention to the skipping rope [illegible] a thousand times, until the perspiration fairly runs off him, and after that [illegible] ten fight rounds with his sparring partner.

On days when he misses the [illegible] does shadow boxing. The time [illegible] each day is two hours and thirty [illegible]. More time than any American fighter ever used steadily. Young Corbett, Jim Jeffries and even Fitzsimmons rarely took more than an hour in the gym, thinking it a waste of time and energy.

Billy Delaney always made Jeffries quit when he saw the big fellow show signs of fatigue, and this was usually an even hour after he started. [illegible] Jeff sneaked away at night and did a few miles on the road or punched the big medicine ball for half an hour or so, but he felt strong and [illegible] the work.

This fellow Moir has been doing this [illegible] for the past two weeks and says he will not rest up until four days before the fight. If he can go that fast and work as he does in the ring Burns might find a harder task before him than he dreamed of at first.

Hard Training Stunt.

Another stunt that Moir does, and one that looks like a heart breaker, is to pull himself [illegible] a rope twenty feet from the ground. He does this four times without [illegible] and does it just as though he was lifting a bag of feathers.

The English sports who have visited Moir at the Seven Stars, in Shepherd's Bush, are certain that he cannot lose. [illegible] him as strong as [illegible] and as fast as Jim Driscoll, and [illegible] sparring partners is [illegible].

LOCAL HORSE BREEDERS ARE FEARFUL OF FALL PRICES

By EDWARD E. COGSWELL.

Several reasons have combined to cause a feeling of uneasiness among the local breeders of trotters as to how the market will be this Fall when their consignments are offered for the high dollar, and if the upward [illegible] prices on rare horseflesh [illegible] years is [illegible] there will be many [illegible] mistaken.

Of course, the one great reason is the present depression in the stock market, causing a lot of the best [illegible] in the past to have to forego the pleasure of replenishing their stables with new racing prospects [illegible] of young sters with futurity engagements.

It is an open secret that wealthy men are just now cramped for ready money, and when a man is pinched in his pocket book there is not much use in expecting that he will feel like loosening up for a horse or two when there are numerous other matters he is obliged to turn what spare change he has into.

Owners Pinched for Money.

In fact, it is likely true in many instances that many of the best trotters to be sold have been consigned only because their owners got involved to an extent in the wholesale drop in stocks and are in actual need of the ready cash their horses may bring.

With the racing sport to lay it takes men of wealth to afford a racing or breeding establishment, consequently, it is to them breeders must look to give up the thousands of dollars in buying the best horses.

Another reason for the scare that horses may not [illegible] the stopping of pool selling at many of the [illegible] tracks in the grand circuit.

It is all well enough to say that rich men [illegible] campaign a racing stable or run a breeding farm in the same spirit they do in purchasing [illegible] automobiles and sailing valuable yachts where there is never a thought of an income except in the pleasure of the sport derived.

A Few Coups Are Liked.

Trotting horses come under another head with the majority. It is the ambition of owners to have horses capable of capturing the rich purse and stake moneys offered by the racing associations, and at the conclusion of the season to point with pride to their total winnings, as well as to the [illegible].

Then too, it is always been human nature with [illegible] to enjoy the pulling off of a few coups during the season. It makes good Winter talk at the clubs to tell the story how one got all the pool tickets in a certain race [illegible] long pools and then netted the whole shooting match, besides not to mention the liberal space the dailies give to such occurrences.

It is more certain than ever that in the future, and near future, too, the trotting horse sport will be entirely of pleasure in seeing one's horse lead his field to the wire, and whatever revenue is to be had will come solely from the purses offered.

No More Pool Selling.

This year saw the pool selling a matter of the past at Readville, [illegible] Providence and Hartford in the Grand Circuit, [illegible] authority than Andy W[illegible] for years has [illegible] through the big [illegible] race tracks in the country, Lexington, Ky. [illegible]

However, in face of the [illegible] consignments of the best horses to be sold [illegible] New York [illegible] beginning [illegible] and continuing [illegible] and [illegible] high class roadsters from New England.

For [illegible] the [illegible] were the most [illegible] past two [illegible] to not value foreign [illegible] at [illegible]. Some [illegible] the reason for this was that the foreigners had filled their [illegible] American horses, and [illegible] along with [illegible] have on hand.

Foreigners After Horses.

The the foreigners are [illegible] to the fact that a dollar [illegible] country is just now worth a [illegible] more than a hundred [illegible] for track [illegible] and already the [illegible] buyers are [illegible] them [illegible] to the [illegible] and when the sale opens [illegible] will be lined before Auctioneer [illegible] the best horses sold. This makes it appear as though they had kept away [illegible] years because they realized [illegible] were selling here for every cent they were worth.

Of those who have arrived are [illegible] who the past imported to their country [illegible] Todd, [illegible] Allen, 2:10, Prince Herschel, 2:1[illegible], Moonlit, 2:1[illegible]. Professor John Armstrong will represent Walter W[illegible], while A. Peacock will look for racing prospects for Louis Winans. In two [illegible] buyers of American trotters in England, Dan Keefe will watch for additions to [illegible] stud, [illegible] for trotters that can win on the [illegible] Austrian trainer Max Woss, Mr. Schlessinger, owner of the Vienna Tattersalls, and Mr. R[illegible], a prominent dealer in Vienna.

Local Horses at Auction.

Breeders may be thankful that these foreigners have arrived, and others are on the way over, because if prices anywhere near remain at the standard of recent years, a lot can be laid to foreign competition in the bidding.

To illustrate what New England horsemen are sending to the sale, the following world-known trotters and pacers are mentioned.

The great young sire, Todd, 2:14¾; Angus Pointer, 2:01¾, the pacing champion of the past season in the Grand Circuit; Frank Bogash, 2:03¾, that has headed the stud of George Van Dyke, Grace Bond [illegible] 2:09½, and Phalia 2:04¾ from the stable of Jimmy [illegible], Jeanie W., 2:0[illegible], the pacing mare that [illegible] strung the boys with at [illegible], Direct [illegible] Miller, 2:0[illegible], Nancy [illegible], 2:04, [illegible] 2:11, [illegible] mare and others from the Johnson Farm; Aquilin, 2:19, sire of [illegible], trial of 2:09; M[illegible] Star, 2:0[illegible], etc., from the Crabtree Stable, and hundreds of others of our best from track and farms.

NELSON DODGES FIGHT WITH GANS

Dane Insisted Weight Should Be the Same as When They Met Before.

Minneapolis, Nov. 23.—[illegible] Nelson this afternoon, after agreeing to fight Joe Gans once again for the lightweight championship of the world, refused to come to terms on a weight [illegible] with the negro champion and negotiations were called off.

Gans demanded that [illegible] weight [illegible] made 133 pounds stripped at the ringside. But Nelson insisted that [illegible] wear their fighting togs [illegible]. After an argument [illegible] which neither man would give [illegible] left the room, declaring that [illegible] want to fight.

"Any Old Weight" for Dane.

Before the fight talk started Nelson declared that he would fight Gans at the champion's terms, and [illegible] would be satisfied with any weight [illegible] reasonable and to any [illegible] of the [illegible].

The first [illegible] the articles [illegible] of the fight [illegible] March 17. Regarding [illegible] of the purse it was agreed [illegible] would get 75 per cent and the [illegible].

Nelson [illegible] he could guarantee a $[illegible] purse for the contest, and when Gans [illegible] that in the articles he [illegible] went [illegible] etc. [illegible] then Gans [illegible] up the articles [illegible] 133 pounds stripped.

Dane Changes His Mind

"Nothing doing," said Nelson.

"This fight," went on the Dane, "has got to be at the weight we fought at before—133 pounds in fighting togs at the ringside. If you won't agree to this I won't fight."

"Didn't you say you would fight at my terms, and doesn't the champion usually make the weight?" [illegible]

"That's right," said Nelson, "[illegible] the champion has a lot to say about the rules [illegible] will not be [illegible]."

Gans again told Nelson [illegible] insist that [illegible] and when Nelson refused [illegible] the room, declaring that [illegible] lished that Nelson had no intention of fighting.

PIERCE ARROWS IN DEMAND

J. W. Maguire Co. yesterday received a sample of the six cylinder forty h. p. Pierce Arrow, and before it had been in the city three hours no less than two sales were recorded. This car is in constant demand and will be kept decidedly busy during the next fortnight in giving demonstrations.

GARFORD AGENCY HERE.

President Hurlburt and Sales Manager Weiss of the Garford Company are spending a few days in this city with the purpose of establishing a local agency for the Garford line of cars. The Garford chassis and car were among the best seen at the recent independent show in New York city, attracting no end of attention there.

MORSE WILLIAMS'S CAPTAIN

WILLIAMSTOWN, Nov. 23.—Gilbert [illegible] Morse of New York City, class of 1909, has been elected captain of the Williams [illegible] team for next year. Morse prepared at the Morris High School in New York city and has played centre and guard for three years on the varsity team.

GARDNER HAS TWO BOUTS.

Jimmy Gardner of Lowell who recently beat "[illegible]" Russell in a six-round bout in Philadelphia has two more fights on his [illegible]. On Wednesday night he will tackle Mr. Donovan of Rochester, for six rounds before the National A. C. of Philadelphia, and on December 10 he will hook up with [illegible] Mantell, the recent conqueror of Billy Mellody, in a ten-round bout before the Winnisimmet A. C. of Chelsea, Mass.

PLANNING YACHT RACE TO BERMUDA

Corinthian Club Will Take Charge of Starting the Contest at Marblehead.

Vice Commodore E. W. Gosling of the Royal Bermuda Yacht Club was recently in Boston and conferred with the officers of the Corinthian Yacht Club concerning next year's race from Marblehead to Bermuda. Various matters were discussed and it was agreed that the Corinthian Yacht Club should take full charge of the starting of the race and that the Royal Bermuda Yacht Club should attend to timing the yachts at the finish off St. David's Head and to what other duties might be necessary.

Commodore Gosling expressed the opinion very strongly that no mistake such as was made last year in having no committee boat at the finish line when "Dervish" arrived would be made, but that a committee boat would be on hand no matter how quick a trip any of the yachts happened to make.

Final decision has been reached regarding classes and there will be four:

Class A—Over ninety feet, rating length.

Class B—Over seventy feet and not over [illegible] feet, rating length.

Class C—Over seventy feet, rating length but over fifty feet over all.

Class D—All yachts not over fifty feet length over all.

In Classes A, B and C rating measurement [illegible] computed from the formula of one-half the length over all plus the load water line.

In Class D the rating length will be the length over all. This arrangement was [illegible] for Class D as at least two boats have already been built to sail in this class [illegible] over all length and it would be a hardship to them to change the rule at this time.

It is probable that a preliminary circular of the race will be issued about December 1.

WILL DRIVE A STUDEBAKER

R. W. Daniels and W. G. Jones of the Prentiss Motor & Supply Co. left Boston last evening for New York, where they go to secure a delivery of the 1908 40-horse power, four-cylinder Studebaker car. These gentlemen will drive the car over the roads from New York, and, although not proposing to make any speed, expect to be in town ready for business with the new car to-morrow morning.

SAYS CARRIGAN IS GREAT PLAYER

Worcester, Nov. 23.—Tom O'B[illegible] er agent for Cleveland team of the American League, is in Worcester for the Winter. O'Brien returns to Cleveland next season.

He declares [illegible] Washington Americans [illegible] season. While [illegible] a great admirer of Bill Carrigan, the former Holy Cross catcher, he [illegible] that he would do much better in the outfield.

"Carrigan is a great hitter," said O'Brien, "a good runner and has lots of sand. He would be better work in the outfield than behind the bat."

NEW AUTO LAWS WILL BE AGITATED IN BAY STATE NEXT SEASON

Motorists Must Fight Hard to Have the Present Ones Retained.

BY J. C. KERRISON.

There is every indication that the motorists will have much to contend against in the way of proposed legislation during the forthcoming session of the State Legislature. It is quite patent that those who have continually made an effort to secure the enactment of laws inimicable to the motorists are already at work devising ways and means to bring about, if possible, a reduction of the present privileges of those who drive or ride in motor vehicles.

Rumors of proposed restrictions of these rights are already rife, and if the motorists desire to retain their present [illegible] under the law they will [illegible] find it profitable to keep wide awake at all seasons of the year. The present regulations are sufficiently ample to cover all questions of road usages on the part of motorists, and under the same [illegible] easily be convicted of almost any and everything.

Present Law Good.

A two years' trial of the present law has proven it is as near perfect as can be secured; it has proven the model for other States, and while in certain respects it is pretty drastic, there is no denying that it is sufficient to meet almost all requirements.

While not seeking any contention on this [illegible] it is safe to say [illegible] organized motorists will do [illegible] to retain the present [illegible] season, and that they [illegible] so far as they are able oppose [illegible] efforts to make vital changes in [illegible].

The present [illegible] is everything that is necessary [illegible] that there [illegible] law and too little intelligent enforcement of the same. And this does not apply alone to [illegible] governing the use of motor vehicles.

The [illegible] is [illegible] to be of vital assistance in the enforcement of the regulations by [illegible] practice to observe the same, as the majority already do [illegible] greatest [illegible] against the man who [illegible] for pleasure and pleasure alone, who is not [illegible] with speed or, as the saying goes, "crazy with the heat," is the action of the irresponsible 3 per cent, the comparatively small number who make a speedway [illegible] of the public highways and turn corners at a breakneck pace.

Scorchers Hurt Sport.

These latter are the men who bring all the odium on the motorists as a whole, and the sooner they are curbed the better for the sport. They, however, usually escape detection and arrest. It is usually the careful and considerate driver who is caught within the meshes of the law, and once haled before the courts he has no better standing than the man who drives crazily over the highways.

There is one thing about the automobile regulations as at present in force which differs materially from all other laws. That is the fact that once charged with a violation of the law, the unfortunate has to prove his innocence, in all other cases the State must prove [illegible] guilt. But in this instance the motorist is legally considered guilty until he has proven otherwise, which condition is brought about by the clause in section 8 of the present law which provides that certain conditions shall be prima facie evidence that the person operating is [illegible] at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable.

This, of course, makes a man guilty on his summons or arrest, and he must show his innocence or take the consequences. Still the majority of motorists are well satisfied that the clause is there. They object not to any considerable extent to the same, but what they do most desire is a fair, intelligent and reasonable interpretation, not alone of that but of all sections in the regulations.

Enforce Law Fairly.

An intelligent enforcement of the law is that which is most desired, but that term does not mean the permitting of a man to drive a car at twenty miles an hour over roads where the speed limit is eight, but it does mean that a man who drives no faster than nine miles over such a road is entirely in keeping with the spirit of the law, that he is usually driving with care and caution, and should not, as was the case no later than last week, be summonsed into court to answer to a charge of violating the park ordinance which calls for eight miles an hour in that particular place.

It is known that in one or two instances persons have been arrested for violating the speed law, limit fifteen miles an hour, when they were not exceeding the same by not one full mile. The strict letter of the law is not enforced on every occasion, it is true. If it were, then every man or woman who drives a motor vehicle would continually be paying fines.

It is not so much the speed at which a car is driven as it is the manner in which it is operated that should be considered in general. A man who drives his car at eight or ten miles an hour may be a detriment and a menace to society and to the public at large, while another man may be able to drive his car thirty or more miles an hour and by no means be as dangerous a proposition on the highways as the man who drives at the slower pace. It is a matter of control, the ability to do the right thing at the proper time, that should be considered.

Irresponsible Operators.

There is much that can be done to prevent this continual warfare on the motorists. The operators themselves can be of no small aid in this by observing the laws themselves and seeing that others do likewise. One of the most prominent police officials in this State, a man who probably has as much to do with the enforcement of the automobile, and especially the speed law, as any other, told the writer that the bulk of his trouble was with the irresponsible operators, the men who have no thought or care for the other fellows, and who go racing along the highways. This official said:

"We probably see as many motor vehicles in a day as the police in any other section of the State, and when I say that it is the small number of irresponsible drivers who cause the great trouble for the others, I speak authoritatively. As a rule the motorist is perfectly willing to keep well within the law, not only as regards speed, but also as regards turning corners, and passing other vehicles. These latter you will find in greater or less number, and they are the men we try and capture and force to take the consequences.

"No later than last week my men arrested three operators for deliberately speeding along the road. When arrested these three men were driving abreast and actually racing. Of course we not only stopped them but summoned them into court, and we shall do likewise with all men of such ilk. The public highway is not a race course, and when three men drive abreast, as these were doing, they are certainly a menace to others and a danger to themselves. As a rule we have but little trouble. We find that the motorists endeavor to recognize the law, and when they do they find no trouble from the men of the department. Speed tests we absolutely refuse to permit or sanction on the roads under my jurisdiction, and the arrests my men have made this year have all been in cases where the men were deliberately violating the speed law."

French Car For Americans

An article in a French journal [illegible] with the condition of the automobile [illegible] and the [illegible] of foreign cars [illegible] this country, laments that the European [illegible] is a development from [illegible] have not the prestige of distinct [illegible] car [illegible] which they had a few years ago [illegible] French [illegible] when the names of certain French made [illegible] reduced prices [illegible] of one German product, were [illegible] a policy which some [illegible] almost with bated breath, but concerns are accredited with following.

HOL-TAN CAR IS THE LATEST

The automobile industry, like the sporting life, is checkered, but never dull, and changes of cars and agencies are of frequent occurrence. What is probably the most startling announcement of the week is that the famous Hol-Tan Company, composed of C. H. Tangeman and Harry Fosdick, that made the name and fame of the Fiat cars known from one end of the country to the other, have definitely decided to abandon the importation of foreign cars and hereafter will build a car of their own which will be known as the Hol-Tan car.

That a firm of this standing should definitely [illegible] its [illegible] foreign [illegible] in favor of the American car [illegible] of the home product.

C. H. Tangeman in discussing the [illegible] said: "Way back in 1901 when we started to exploit the Fiat car, our competitors thought we were crazy in [illegible] over an unknown Italian car. [illegible] said that [illegible], but when it came [illegible] cars they were not in [illegible] showed that they were mistaken, as the Fiat car proved one of the [illegible] and in 1906 [illegible] the largest number of cars ever imported by one firm. Since [illegible] demand for foreign cars has steadily decreased, and, not wishing to be [illegible] with a dying business, we have, [illegible] decided to build a [illegible] of our own that will, we believe, be the equal of any foreign car, and for half the price [illegible] is built on lines better [illegible].

We [illegible] all sorts of agencies and [illegible] offered to us, but after nearly a year's careful study of [illegible] build our own car [illegible] designed by Louis P[illegible], the original designer of the Pe[illegible] car, which will be manufactured by the Moon Motor Car Company of St. Louis, Mo. We have taken 70 per cent. of the output of the Moon factory and have secured all of the country east of Pittsburg and Buffalo, including New York, Boston and Philadelphia, as our selling territory.

"The company will offer for the season of 1908 two all American models, a seven passenger car called the Hol-Tan Special, a five-passenger touring car and a two, three or four passenger roadster.

"The price of the 1908 Hol-Tan Special" chassis, 121-inch wheel base, with 34-inch wheels, has been fixed at $2,750, with a regular tonneau body, seating seven passengers, the price will be $3,750. Where special bodies are ordered the purchaser pays a contract price as agreed upon. The standard five-passenger and roadster types sell for $3,000."

A. A. A. MEMBERSHIP PAYS.

A Baltimore man who tours considerably was asked by a friend what use it was to hold membership in the American Automobile Association. He replied: "It is worth much more than $2 a year to me to feel that I am not a sponge, but am helping to support the national body that is helping the cause of motoring and benefiting all of us."

WINTON CO. SOLE EXHIBITOR.

At the first Chicago show, held late in September, 1900, there were three steam, four electric and five gasoline exhibits. Of these gasoline exhibitors the Winton Company is the only one that will exhibit at the Chicago Show of November 30-December 7.

HAYNES TO DRIVE IN CHICAGO TEST

John W. Haynes, who successfully competed in the last Vanderbilt elimination [illegible] driving a Haynes, and who drove a [illegible] Dragon runabout in the last [illegible] American Automobile Association tour, will pilot one of the new Dragon runabouts in the Chicago Motor Club's 630-mile sealed bonnet contest, scheduled for November 26, 27 and 28—two days before the opening of the Chicago show.

The first day the cars will run to South Bend, Ind., and return, a distance of 230 miles. The second day the run will be to Rockford, Ill., and back, 200 miles; and on the third day to Ottawa, Ill., and return, another 200 miles. The toolboxes [illegible] the bonnets, and the contestants will be unable to make adjustment of any kind without penalization.

CRACK MOTOR BOATS IN BIG SHOW HERE

Several of the handsomest and most modern cruising cabin power boats ever designed and built will be among the attractions at the coming power boat show in Mechanics Hall.

The National Motor Boat and Engine Show will be the greatest of its kind ever given in this country, and should prove doubly interesting this year, because it will be a distinctive exhibition, and will not be a part simply of the automobile show as in past years.

The growth of the industry has been so great and the increase in the popularity of the [illegible] craft has been so marked that it became necessary to hold a separate exhibition which will be greatly appreciated by all lovers of boat motoring, who will flock to Mechanics Hall by the thousand to view the displays and inspect the new power boats which will be found revelations when compared with the craft of but a few years ago.

Those who hunt and fish will find an inspection of some of the small motor craft most beneficial, for the day of the tedious paddling or rowing is over and long journeys can be made in a day where but a few [illegible] before in a [illegible] fishing or [illegible] the work, and many of these [illegible] motors will [illegible] shown at the show. In fact every kind of a boat and engine known to the trade will be included in the display which promises to interest not only those directly connected with yachting and boating, but the general public as well.

YANKEE INGENUITY BEATS FOREIGNERS

Here and there in the 1908 models is found an illustration of how Yankee ingenuity has outsped the foreign makers. Mechanically operated valves, introduced [illegible] have become practically universal, [illegible] European methods have advanced very little beyond the point of introduction, while much has been done here. A [illegible] the brake [illegible] system of the [illegible] car [illegible] are replaced by one with a [illegible] shaft [illegible] compression [illegible] for [illegible] make [illegible] has been reduced to one [illegible] from the [illegible] bar, with [illegible] from the bar to the [illegible] advance that is attracting the [illegible] of designers on both sides of the [illegible].

MOTOR CAR SOCIAL MEDIUM.

While some rail against the automobile as a vehicle of the heartless rich, it is indubitable that it has been considerably of a leveler. There is a genial democracy of the highway between motorists through which many have extended their acquaintance into exclusive social circles, and quite a few have gained entrance thereto through the medium of the motor car.

MOTORING CURES BLUES.

The automobiling habit is a sovereign remedy for melancholia. There is too frequent and rapid a change of scene while motoring for one to be constant in moody introspection.

MANY ENTRIES FOR SEALED BONNET TEST

More Than 50 Cars to Take Part in 630-Mile Run of Chicago Club.

With present indications that the number of cars nominated to compete in the coming Chicago Motor Club's 630-mile sealed bonnet reliability contest will exceed fifty, and that it will include several makes that finished the 1907 Glidden tour with a perfect score, this run has become a truly national affair from almost any point it may be viewed.

The dates set are November 26, 27 and 28, and the big Chicago show will open two days later. The first day the cars will be sent to South Bend, Ind., and return, a distance of 230 miles. The second day to Rockford, Ill., and back, 200 miles, and on the third day to Ottawa, Ill., and back, another double century, thus making [illegible] double century runs in [illegible] innovation will be [illegible] sealing the tool box in addition to the bonnet, so that it will not alone be [illegible] for want of tools, the driver will be unable to make a single adjustment or repair without [illegible]. To this end [illegible] official observer who shall [illegible] competing entrant and approved by the contest committee whose duty it shall be to see that every rule shall be strictly [illegible].

What [illegible] materially add to the [illegible] are the rough, hilly and [illegible] roads that will have to be negotiated. This [illegible] a late season of the [illegible] when the weather usually is unfit for [illegible] travel over [illegible]. Be that as it may, intense interest is astir among present as well as prospective owners of automobiles, and it looks as if nobody is going to be disappointed.

POOR INFLATION WILL KILL TIRES

It sounds a bit paradoxical to say that insufficient inflation is sometimes the cause of tires "blowing out," but this comes from such an excellent authority as E. H. Broadwell of the Fisk Rubber Company, who explains [illegible]: "When a tire is not pumped up sufficiently, the pressure of the ground on the underside has a tendency to loosen the several plys of fabric in the [illegible] so that they rub together [illegible] the tire makers say [illegible] cloth, is where [illegible] count tremendously [illegible] this is the reason [illegible] tires are expensively made and have one more ply of friction fabric than others of the same diameter. The rubbing together or [illegible] of two plys causes the threads to [illegible] and so weakens the casing that the inner tube with its high pressure, bursts through, or blows out. Old tires, then, more than new ones, should be properly inflated, not too hard nor yet slack."

POPE-HARTFORD A WINNER.

In the annual hill climb of the Rhode Island Automobile Club last week the Pope-Hartford was eminently successful, capturing two out of three events and winning second in the third. In the $3,000 and $5,000 classes the Hartford took first. The Hartford also scored heavily in time, she capturing the best time of the day for [illegible] cars. The Dodge Motor Vehicle Company is naturally much pleased with the showing.

MANY VICTORIES FOR STEVENS-DURYEA

Interesting Books on This Car's Record Is Being Distributed by J. W. Bowman.

J. W. Bowman, the Boston agent for the Stevens-Duryea, has a well-printed booklet which contains interesting records of some Stevens-Duryea victories. It does not chronicle every record made by this car but gives a good idea of what has been done since April 29, 1902. The early records, as well as those of later date, are noteworthy for the reason that in nearly every case the Stevens-Duryea defeated machines of from two to five times their horse power.

The first victory recorded was in the class under 2,000 pounds, at a climb up Commonwealth Avenue Hill, Boston, under the auspices of the Massachusetts Automobile Club. In November, 1903, the light car won a fifty-one mile road race from Washington, D. C., to Frederick, Md., defeating sixteen other makes, covering the hilly course in two hours and six minutes, which was wonderful speed four years ago. In this way, averaging a consistent half dozen achievements a year, the record is brought to the endurance run of the Quaker City Club, last January, when the big six was the only car out of twenty-four others entered, to finish with a clean score, and the Fort George Hill climb, August 3, when the light six, [illegible] car made better [illegible] was made by sixteen other makes, including cars of forty, fifty, sixty and seventy horse power.

HENSHAW'S DEFI NOT ACCEPTED

It is some weeks since C. S. Henshaw took his stock electric vehicle and established the world's record in a public performance covering 101 miles over ordinary roads to Gloucester and return, and passing through numerous towns, on one charge of current.

Shortly after that test Mr. Henshaw issued a challenge through the Boston newspapers for a contest with anyone using a stock electric vehicle for a mileage test [illegible] in Eastern [illegible]. The time limit of thirty days, which was [illegible] of the challenge, has elapsed, and now Mr. Henshaw states that he will issue a new challenge in the Spring giving a handicap, if necessary, to anyone who may care to compete against him, and he promises to use a stock electric vehicle which will beat his former record by several miles.

ROYALTY AT AUTO SHOW.

The international automobile exhibition at Copenhagen closed on October 8, after having been visited by about 50,000 persons. Among those who visited the show was the King, who, although one of the few monarchs who are not automobile enthusiasts, was still attracted by the affair. He was accompanied by his brother, the King of Greece, and as they both examined all of the exhibits most carefully, paying quite a lengthy visit to the Ford stand, it is to be hoped that motoring in Denmark until now much oppressed by lawmakers will become more popular.

PLAN TOUR OF MT. WASHINGTON

Mt. Washington, the mecca for not less than eight hundred touring parties during the last year, promises to be once again the centre of interest next Summer for touring competition, hill climbing and so on.

The plan for a six-day endurance run in the Mt. Washington district, the final day to include a climb up the mountain for touring cars, is not so much out of the possibilities as might be thought, for motorists generally commend the plan, and Messrs. Anderson and Price are not averse to once again taking a hand in the promoting of an automobile carnival of international importance. Nor are motorists generally averse to taking part in any event promoted in a district so altogether delightful for touring.

WONDERFUL SPEED MUST BE MADE AT ORMOND MEETING.

Cars to Qualify Will Have to Go at Rate of 100 Miles in Hour.

Few who saw the great record ride will ever forget the mile in 0 39 by William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., at Ormond in 1904. When Mr. Vanderbilt completed that great drive other autoists asked him with their breath coming in short gasps whether he "had able to remain on the ground all through." Mr. Vanderbilt assured his friends that his car jumped oftentimes almost a foot from the ground and the entire world cried [illegible]—that is, the world which was not at Ormond that year.

All this is history, but to-day they are about to require a car to qualify at Ormond to do twenty miles at the rate of 100 miles an hour, and few wonder at the requirement, believing that it will be done. That is a rate of 0 36 to the mile and is not considered so very much out of the ordinary. The coming Ormond meet may even see the great record of two miles in 0 58 4-5 cut [illegible] considerably, although freak cars are to be barred from the events. Stock cars are likely to beat the Vanderbilt record of 0 39, and special racing cars constructed in America, are likely to beat the great steam record of Marriott.

Who is there to tell of the wonderful speed possible when the American makers make their trials? And who is there to tell when Europe sends over its best to oppose the Americans in their upward progress? The battle of the American and the European giants, and the battle against time will be noteworthy this year on the tide rowed sands, and history will go forward [illegible] another notch. The time is ripe in March for great doings, and both the American [illegible] and the importers are ready to give Old Father Time such a drubbing as he never received before.

[illegible] for competition, too, are [illegible] way, for the American [illegible] makers are pretty evenly [illegible] contests are certainly to [illegible] in history. The time for the meet could not have been arranged better, for March is really one of the finest in the South, and at that time the visitors will have recovered from their present panicky feeling and will be in shape to take things easy and enjoy themselves.

ALGONQUIN CO. IS ORGANIZED

The latest change in the local motor world is the reorganization of the Henshaw Motor Company, agents for the Oldsmobile, Charles S. Henshaw retiring from all connections therewith, and a new company under the name of the Algonquin Motor Car Company having been organized. It is simply a change of name, as neither the locality or the product of the company has been changed in the slightest degree.

W. F. McQuillan, who was prominently identified with the old company, is the treasurer of the new outfit, while A. E. Adams becomes managing director. Mr. Adams has for years been prominently connected with several of the prominent dealers and agencies. He gained his first insight into the motor vehicle game in the early stages of the industry, and his experience will prove of great value to the new company.

The Algonquin Motor Car Company will handle the several lines of Oldsmobiles, with which product Mr. Adams is perfectly familiar, he last year being connected with the A. E. Morrison Company, local agents for the same, and after the accident to Mr. Morrison, on July 4, virtually assumed the management of the affairs of the Morrison company. The future success of the Oldsmobile in this locality is assured.

MANY TAXIMETER CABS IN LONDON

There are, it is estimated, about a thousand taximeter auto cabs now plying for hire in the London streets, says an English exchange. This is, so to speak, but a drop in the ocean of metropolitan traffic, but the taximeter auto cabs have found favor in the eyes of the public to such an extent that people are content to wait at the stands in Piccadilly, Hyde Park corner and Trafalgar square until a cab is disengaged or the driver is willing to take them. For it cannot be denied that owing to the demand and the high wages earned the drivers are too prosperous to ply for hire except when it suits them, and they like to choose their fares.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—Er—well, we'd a good deal rather have you here.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—Yes, sir; I know that, but at that time it looked as if the fight was between Fitzgerald and me. What? Yes. Why, you've no idea how the thing is growing. It's beyond the control of our department unless we can get the Chief here. How? I said the Chief. Fire Department, don't you know. Yes. Made it up myself. I THOUGHT you'd like it.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—Why, Berry is out for this [illegible] passing the word all along the line in the residential districts about his fights for cheaper fares and better streets. You'd be surprised.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—The postoffice? Twenty-five hundred men, in all departments. What's that? Oh, their influence ought to be good for three or four votes apiece. What say? N-no, not at first, but we are letting it be understood down there that you have promised the office to Mansfield, and the boys have taken their coats off. How's that? Don't compromise you? Certainly not, Senator. Do just as you please, only it's a good idea to let them keep on expecting Mansfield, I find. How? Oh, Ned don't care. Ha, ha, ha! Yes, sure.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—I'll attend to that.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—Well, it looks as if the colored vote might get away. Guild! Say, he hasn't done a thing for them, while City Hall and the Court House have been clever towards them. I know, but that's what they say. What? Yes, I said that to one of them to-day. How? Well, this fellow said Lincoln has been dead a long time.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—School committee? Well, the convention was the smallest in years, but—— How's that? Woodbury? Yes, he showed up; they put him on one of the committees. How? Well, the labor people may object to him on account of that Franklin Union row, but our fellows need him, of course.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—I'll attend to that, Senator.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—Just as you say, Senator, of course.

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—Well, frankly, I've thought at times that after we got through shaking the tree this Coulthurst chap may pick up the apples, but——

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—"Keep up a stout heart"? Certainly, only I thought you wanted the facts, and——

The VOICE— ——————

G. A. H.—Yes, sir; yes, sir; certainly, sir; just as you say; I'll attend to that. Good night, Senator. Oh, Senator, be as clever as you can on that Brownsville affair. I think the colored brother may be watching.

You are cordially invited to join and co-operate with a comittee of the citizens of Boston, acting as an independent body to promote the non-partisan candidacy of John A. Coulthurst for Mayor of Boston.

If as a friend of Mr. Coulthurst, or as a person interested in the welfare of the citizens of Boston, you are desirous of lending your aid to this cause, kindly communicate AT ONCE with

OPEN LEAGUE CLUB IN SOMERVILLE

Permanent Quarters Secured in Studio Building, Davis Square.

In addition to the Independence League city and ward committees, which were elected in every ward in Somerville at the State primaries last October, there was formed last Wednesday in that city the Somerville Independence League Club. Its aims are to promote political discussion and to bring together in a social way all those citizens who have become, or intend to become, Leaguers, and also those who would like to know more about the League and what it stands for.

The club has obtained permanent headquarters in Room 6, Studio Building, Davis Square, which will be shared by the City Committee, and will be kept open the year round.

Officers were elected as follows: Andrew J. H. Bickford, President; Wilbur S. Porter, Vice-President; Stephen E. Simmons, Recording Secretary; and William E. Dunning, Financial Secretary and Treasurer. All who are in search of information are invited to call at the headquarters any evening, where there will always be some one to receive them.

ONLY 2 DEMOCRATS ON HIBBARD BOARD

Twenty-one Republicans and two lone Democrats comprise the much advertised and expectantly awaited Hibbard "non-partisan" campaign committee, according to the list given out from the Hibbard headquarters last night.

The democrats on the committee are Dr. Morton H. Prince of Ward 11, who was turned down as a mayoralty candidate by the Republican City Committee when proposed by the Good Government Association, and Attorney Louis D. Brandeis. Mr. Brandeis also lives in Ward 11. In fact the committee has a distinct Back Bay flavor, eleven of the twenty-three members coming from exclusive Ward 11.

Some of the Republicans on the committee are Louis A. Frothingham, defeated for Mayor by Mayor Fitzgerald two years ago, former Governor Bates, Street Commissioner William E. Hannan, J. Mitchell Galvin, former city clerk; former Representative Robert Homans, Alderman F. R. Bangs, Treasurer Guy Murchie of the Republican City Committee, Representative Grafton D. Cushing and Charles W. M. Williams, clerk of the Juvenile Court.

$2,000,000 OUTLAY ON 'THE BREAKERS'

PLAN SERIES OF DIKES

Newport, R. I., Nov. 23.—Aristocratic Newport is, during the coming Spring, to be invaded by mediaeval architecture. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, her sons Alfred and Reginald and her daughters Gladys and Gertrude (Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney), are to petition Newport's Board of Aldermen for the privilege of closing the "Cliff" ends of Ruggles and Victoria avenues. These avenues about the magnificent "Breakers" on the north and south, while public highways, merely separate the "Breakers" from the adjoining estates.

It goes without saying that the prayer of the petitioners will be granted and the Vanderbilts, in this instance, will at once gain what Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Hazard Perry Belmont (the latter being formerly Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, senior) have tried to do so many times for their estate, but always without success. The Vanderbilts intend to connect Ruggles and Victoria avenues with the Atlantic ocean which skirts the vast "Breakers" on the east. The two avenues will then, where they adjoin the [illegible] great moats, which are to be spanned by several beautiful [illegible] the present grilled wall is to be removed and a vast one with turrets and [illegible] erected.

It is estimated that fully two million dollars will be expended, one half of which will [illegible] by Newport's artisans, mechanics and laborers. When fully completed the new "Breakers" will be the only known estate of the kind in the United States.

This was the second of the association's list of entertainments for the winter season and was very [illegible].

Mr. Carruth took for his subject "The Finding of the New World," and went to some length on the early life and struggles of the explorer in Italy and Portugal. Much attention was given to the biography of Columbus by his son Ferdinand.

RABBIT FIRES RIFLE; FATALLY WOUNDS BOY

Washington Court House, Nov. 23.—Orville Hare, aged eighteen, son of Denny Hare, and John Coleman, both of this city, were rabbit hunting on the farm of C. John Row and they placed their guns on the ground while they scared a rabbit from the corn shock. The rabbit jumped and one of the guns went off, the ball entering Hare's back near the spine. It passed through his body, and was cut from the skin in front. He was fatally shot. The rabbit touched the trigger and fired the gun as it ran.

BURGLAR'S CAPTURE DUE TO WOMAN'S QUICK WIT

Intruder Caught by Police in House With $1,000 Worth of Valuables on His Person.

Mrs. J. W. Beunke, of Greenough avenue, Cambridge, looked out from her sitting-room window yesterday afternoon just in time to see a pair of masculine legs disappearing through a rear window in Alexander Henderson's house, at No. 5 Ellsworth Park, whose premises back up against those of Mrs. Beunke.

Mrs. Beunke called to her father, M. H. Munhall, in whose house she lives, to telephone the police. This resulted a few moments later in the capture by two policemen of William H. Dunham and one thousand dollars worth of gold and jewelry belonging to Mr. Henderson's family, at that time attending the Harvard-Yale football game.

The capture is considered one of the best and most important ever done by the Cambridge police, and both they and the Hendersons are extremely glad that Mrs. Beunke's quick wit started such timely action in the matter.

Mrs. Beunke's own story, as told by her to the Boston Sunday American last night, is as follows:

Saw Man in Back Yard.

"I live here on Greenough avenue with my father, Mr. Munhall. Yesterday afternoon about half past 3 father and I were looking out of the sitting room window across the back yards to Mr. Henderson's back yard. We noticed a man, [illegible] well dressed, in the Hendersons' back yard. He seemed to be looking at the house. He was all right [illegible] thought [illegible] business there. Father went [illegible] about [illegible].

"About [illegible] later I happened to think of [illegible] out of the window [illegible] not thinking, however, that I would see anything wrong. I was startled to see a man's legs disappearing through the little pantry window in the rear of Mr. Henderson's house. The window is a little high from the ground. I guess the man had put a box up to help him get at the window.

"I didn't stop to see any more, as I knew the man had no business climbing in the Henderson's pantry window that [illegible] father that some one had broken into Henderson's house and for him to telephone the police. Father did so [illegible] I saw them get the man. That's all I did."

[illegible] the police end of this snappy bit of work starts in with the first telephone tip from Mr. Munhall. Roundsman William Robertson was sitting at the desk in Station [illegible] when the telephone rang. He was [illegible] to get this message:

Gets Startling Message.

"I live on Greenough avenue and I've just seen a man break into Mr. Henderson's house at No. 5 Ellsworth Park. Send some one over quick."

Then the informant hung up the receiver, and that was all Robertson could get. He didn't even know who was giving him the tip. For a second he thought it might be some mischievous person trying to fool him, but the tip looked too good to him to disregard it. A moment later Patrolmen McCaffrey and Dinan were galloping in the police hitch to Ellsworth Park. Dinan took the front of the house. McCaffrey went around to the rear and was himself just in time to see the pair of legs going through the window, as Mrs. Beunke had been. Only the legs were coming out this time. Instead of going in McCaffrey simply waited and let the owner of the legs drop to the ground. Then McCaffrey covered him and put him under arrest. The two officers searched the house for other intruders, but found none. Then they took their prisoner to the station.

There the prisoner said he was William H. Dunham, twenty years old, of [illegible]. The police will look him up there.

When searched the prisoner developed a quantity of loot, valued at about $1,000. This included half a dozen watches, diamond rings, brooches, stickpins, chains and [illegible]. All this was tucked away in pockets and other hiding places, one solitaire diamond ring being found in the toe of one shoe.

Slays Husband and Self to Stop Exposure of Her Double Life

Remarkable Story is Brought Out by Strange Tragedy at New Rochelle

New York, Nov. 23.—Mrs. Grace Smith shot and killed her husband, Nicholas M. Smith, at their home in New Rochelle today. She then set fire to the house and killed herself with the same pistol with which she had shot her husband. Immediately following this crime it was discovered that for years she had been living a double life.

She had told her husband that "she was the daughter of ex-Lieutenant Governor Bulkeley of Connecticut and that she would in a few days come into one-sixth of an estate of $1,250,000 that Bulkeley had left at his death." Fear of exposure and the certainty that her life's story would be revealed led her to kill her husband and herself.

The real Grace Bulkeley, now Mrs. David Van Schaick, was found last night in Hartford. She said that for fifteen years she has known that some one was impersonating her. She had heard of the double in New York, Boston and various parts of Connecticut, and once even in a town within a few miles of Hartford. Yet the real bearer of the name and the usurper never came face to face. Why the imposter adopted it, in the first place, is the only unexplained mystery in the whole strange tale. There was nothing to be gained by its use—save possibly social prestige, which this woman did not then, fifteen years ago, try to gain.

She never used it for theft or other illegal purposes, it appears. Only with Smith was there any plausible object.

DAN O'LEARY WINS IN 6-DAY WALKING MATCH

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 23.—Dan O'Leary, aged 63, won the six day's walking match which closed at midnight, over Henry Schmidt of Chicago, aged 56. O'Leary covered a total of 250 miles, while Schmidt only made 197. The latter has been very lame for several days, attributing his lameness to the wooden floor of the hall where the match was held. O'Leary was greatly weakened by two severe attacks of bleeding.

LODGE REPORTED READY TO WITHDRAW HIBBARD

Big Republicans Said to Have Become Alarmed at Shift of Leaders to Coulthurst.

Is Lodge going to withdraw Hibbard?

Despite repeated denials, and notwithstanding the palpably strained effort to take it as a joke, the report that Senator Lodge is about to pull his man out of the mayoralty race, and that the Republican machine will "endorse" a Democrat, was received last night and travelled over town by wireless.

Big Republicans are said to have got to Lodge within a day or two by telegraph, telephone and mail. These Republicans are said to have put the local situation square up to the Republican boss. They are said to have told him all about the defection of the Hon. John K. Berry and other prominent Republicans.

Mr. Lodge was given to understand that it's all going out and there's nothing coming in; that the procession of Republicans towards Coulthurst is not being balanced by any similar stream of Democrats into the Hibbard camp. On the contrary, his informants are said to have told Senator Lodge with exceeding frankness that the anti-machine Democrats are walking hand in hand to Coulthurst with the anti-machine Republicans.

According to the tale that circulated among politicians last night, Senator Lodge has regretfully made up his mind that Mr. Hibbard won't do. Agents and missionaries have accordingly, it is said, been putting the bee in the bonnet of a man who, they think, would be able to attract Democratic votes.

One of the reports circulated last night was that James J. Storrow, president of the School Board, and member of the firm of Lee, Higginson & Co., had been prevailed upon to take Hibbard's place as the Republican mayoralty nominee.

SOUTH END FAMILIES FLEE TO ESCAPE FIRE

Nearly a score of people were driven to the street in their night clothes and at least $5,000 damage was caused as the result of a fire which broke out on the first story of the six-story brick building at No. 85 Warrenton street shortly before three o'clock this morning.

The building is occupied as a storehouse on the Warrenton street side by the Shawmut Furniture Company, and runs through onto Tremont street, which part is used as a salesroom by the same company.

By the time the apparatus arrived flames were shooting across Warrenton street and the families of James McDonald and Joseph Logan, at No. 87 Warrenton street, were forced into the street by the dense volumes of smoke. Smoke poured through onto Tremont street and three families in an adjoining building rushed to the street in their night clothes.

NEIGHBORS TURN OUT IN GREAT NUMBERS TO GREET CANDIDATE

JOHN A. COULTHURST opened his campaign for the mayoralty last night by spreading the pages of Mayor John F. Fitzgerald's "Republic" before his fellow citizens and asking them to behold the growth of the advertising business thereof while a great host punctuated his stinging arraignment with rousing cheers.

Mr. Coulthurst, speaking in Knights of Honor Hall, at Roslindale, to a gathering of men and women which taxed its capacity to the utmost, made it plain that since the days of Guttenburg few weekly journals with an estimated circulation of 2,500 have made their advertising pages so necessary to banking institutions, railroads, telephone companies, elevated railway companies, electric lighting companies and the like.

"A Pushing Publisher Promotes Prosperity," declared the Independence League candidate for Mayor, while the enthusiastic crowd cheered its delight.

Roslindale turned out in force to welcome Mr. Coulthurst, who was among the leaders of Roslindale's three years war for a five-cent fare.

"On this platorm," said the candidate, "I made my first speech in 1901 as a candidate for office. What more fitting, then, that I should here make my first formal appeal for higher honors, before these friends and neighbors who, in the Fall of 1901, first signified their approval."

Declaring that he is to present Boston with a study of Fitzgeraldism from various angles, Mr. Coulthurst began with the "Republic" and its wonderful popularity among the advertising agents of public service corporations.

Next in interest to the "Republic," the first big rally audience seemed to be interested in the statement that the city of Boston to-day owes $114,000,000, on which taxpayers, wage earners, rent payers and working men contribute $7,000,000 a year in interest and sinking fund requirements.

COULTHURST OUTLINES HIS PLATFORM IN SPEECH

Mr. Coulthurst's speech follows.

Mr. Chairman, friends, ladies and gentlemen:

Standing here on this platform in Knights of Honor Hall, Roslindale, filled with mingled emotions and memories, I am led to contrast this present occasion, and the possibilities which may grow out of it, with many events of the past: I recall the first day thirty-one years ago that my mother brought me to the primary school within one hundred yards of this spot, where the fire engine house is now located, and the scene I made on the schoolroom when I was left by her in the hands of the teacher and in the midst of a lot of strange boys and girls. I can remember the day that we marched in a body over to the Charles Sumner School when in that first year of my school life it was first opened for school purposes.

I recall the bright day in June, 1885, that I proudly received my diploma as a graduate of the Charles Sumner Grammar School from the hands of some member of the School Committee and in the smiling presence of Artemus Wiswell, principal of the school, long since returned to his fathers. And I recall how after my Boston College days, and my Georgetown College days, and my law school days, and after having been admitted to the bar, I returned here to Roslindale in 1893 to open my first law office.

Recalls Five-Cent Fare Fight.

I can recall my election to the secretaryship of the Roslindale Citizens' Association, my appointment to the chairmanship of its committee on streets, parks, and public grounds in those first days of my practice and the interest I took in the local improvements of this district, and I can vividly recall the night back in November, 1900 when, in this very hall at a mass meeting of the citizens of this district, I was appointed chairman of the executive committee in the five cent fare movement [illegible] presiding officer of this meeting, Mr. James Worth. I recall distinctly the [illegible] weeks and months and the [illegible] we made in the Legislature of 1901, and the year [illegible] before the Committee on Railroads and the valuable service rendered the cause by the then representatives, Messrs. Breed and Smith, and by all the other active five-cent fare fighters. It was here in the Fall of 1902 that I made my first stump speech as a candidate for public office. It was here that many times subsequently I have addressed my fellow citizens in the subsequent campaigns for re-election before I retired to private life. So that this spot, the platform of Knights of Honor Hall, occupies a peculiar place in my memory. And now I am before you, fellow citizens, to ask your support for my candidacy for the highest office in the gift of the citizens of Boston.

It is therefore quite fitting that I should make my first formal appeal to the voters of Boston upon the stump here before my friends and neighbors, who, by their votes back in the Fall of 1901 first approved my holding public office, because they, being more familiar with my public record than the rest of the voters of Boston, are in a better position to determine whether I am competent to hold the office to which I now aspire, and whether if elected, I will carry out the platform and principles I have already announced through the columns of the press.

I am therefore very grateful for this cordial and auspicious reception, and I pledge myself, if elected, to strive earnestly to merit by my administration of the city's affairs the approval that you have given me this evening.

Announces His Platform.

The platform and principles which I have advocated and will continue to ad-

Names of Lucky Ones This Week Represent Wide Range of Territory.

ANOTHER COMPETITION

Quotation Found in Another Column Will Interest Many American Readers.

The names of the 190 winners in the Boston Sunday American's great contest for 25,000 trading stamps are printed herewith. They are distributed as follows: Five prizes of 1,000 stamps, ten prizes of 200 stamps, fifty prizes of 100 stamps, 100 prizes of fifty stamps.

The interest in the sixth contest was remarkable. All over New England readers of the American studied the inverted word problem in last Sunday's American, and sent their solutions to this office. Not only women shoppers, who realize the money value of the stamps offered, but scores of men also entered the race and their names are to-day seen among the lucky winners.

The Sunday American to-day offers the seventh allotment of 25,000 trading stamps, which will be given away to readers next week, with an option of the value of the stamps in orders on any Boston store. In another column is printed an announcement of conditions which gives the sentence forming the familiar quotation which is the basis of the contest. TO AIM LAWS AT BAY STATE AUTOISTS

Providence, R. I., Nov. 23.—Drastic legislation affecting owners and drivers of automobiles from Massachusetts who come into Rhode Island is to be enacted at the next session of the Legislature as the result of an aroused public sentiment consequent upon the recent fatalities due to reckless driving of cars in city streets. The Rhode Island Automobile Club is agitating for the passage of a law requiring chauffeurs and drivers to pass an examination for a license before they are allowed to operate cars. Members of the Legislature are also agitating the necessity of a law which will give the State some control over cars and motorists which come here from other States, and who are not required to have a Rhode Island license if only here temporarily. It is declared by local autoists that most of the reckless driving is done by owners and drivers of cars from the Bay State, who come from Attleboro, Taunton, Fall River, Boston, Worcester and other places.

LEAGUE CANDIDATES TO FILL VACANCIES ON SCHOOL COMMITTEE

JAS. P. MAGENIS

DR. DAVID D. SCANNELL

LEAGUE NOMINATES MAGENIS, SCANNELL

Candidates for School Board Also Backed by Republicans and P. S. A.

To keep the public schools out of politics, and to keep politics out of the public schools, the Independence League and the Republican party have nominated for the School Committee Dr. David Scannell of Ward 11, an instructor in anatomy in the Harvard Medical School, and James P. Magenis of Ward 20, a well known attorney.

Dr. Scannell and Lawyer Magenis also have the backing of the Public School Association. The nominations were made simultaneously by the Leaguers and the Republican in the P. S. A. offices through committees chosen in convention the night before.

Dr. Scannell, a Democrat, residing in Jamaica Plain, was born in the North End of Boston thirty-three years ago. Besides being a Harvard instructor, he is visiting surgeon at the Boston City Hospital.

Opposed Superintedent English

Appointed by Mayor Fitzgerald to membership on the Board of Trustees, Dr. Scannell voted with all of his colleagues, except William J. Sullivan, to remove Superintendent English of the Pauper Institutions on Long Island. The Mayor sent for the trustees to protest against their action. English would not ask for an investigation of the charges against him, [illegible] trustees would not reinstate him. [illegible] Fitzgerald thereupon asked for their resignations. All refused except [illegible], and the Mayor removed them [illegible]. English was not removed.

Mr. Magenis was born thirty-nine years ago at North Adams. He attended the public schools there, and [illegible] the office of the North Adams Transcript, learning the printer's trade, and then becoming a reporter. William B. Plunkett made him editor of the North Adams Freeman.

Polled Heavy Vote.

Coming to Boston in 1897 as chief deputy of the United States Internal Revenue Collector's office, Mr. Magenis shortly resigned on account of ill health, and in the fall took up the law. He was admitted to the Suffolk county bar in 1901.

Making his first venture in public life last fall as an aspirant for the Republican Congressional nomination in the Tenth District, Mr. Magenis polled the second highest vote in a group of five candidates.

807 BABES FOUND WELCOME REFUGE

Eight hundred and seven mites of humanity were cared for at St. Mary's Infant Asylum on Everett avenue, Dorchester, during the past year, at an expense of $24,0[illegible].

Of this large sum only $700 was paid by the parents or guardians of children received, which shows how dependent the asylum is upon charity. And yet, with no endowment, the Sisters of Charity were able to meet all obligations through the generosity of the institution's friends.

An excellent idea of the good work performed in caring for the unfortunate children delivered to its care by the courts and others, is given in the annual report of the Sisters, which has just been filed with Archbishop O'Connell. This shows that since the institution was founded 15,463 children have been received. Almost every town within a radius of 100 miles of Boston sent one or more charges to the institution during the fiscal year ended September 30, 1907.

There is no distinction made in the reception of children because of color, race or creed. Children abandoned in doorways are welcomed as warmly as the more fortunate little ones, for whose care the parents pay.

The Sisters will be glad to receive donations of money, clothing or anything of use in the good work, and such contributions will be promptly acknowledged.

PRIEST SUES FOR INJURIES TO HORSE

Worcester, Nov. 23.—Rev. Dr. John J. McCoy, pastor of St. Anne's Church, to-day entered suit through his attorneys against the New York Central & Hudson River railroad to recover $800 for injuries to his thoroughbred horse while being transported from Springfield to Worcester.

OPTIMISTIC WASHINGTON REPORT AIDS SLOWLY ADVANCING STOCKS

BANK STATEMENT MORE FAVORABLE

Money Once More Accumulating Relieves Tightness of the Market.

A good bank statement, optimistic reports from Washington in regard to the subscription toward the Treasury 3s, and the fact that money seems to be slowly accumulating in the banks were the factors that were instrumental in making the two-hour session of yesterday's stock markets both in New York and in Boston exceptionally brisk and strong in prices.

In Wall street the trading was somewhat influenced by the depleted attendance of brokers, many being away to attend the big football game, but the amount of trading which was transacted was of a decidedly large volume for a two-hour session. In Boston, firmness was also predominant, but activity was missing and the market was more inclined to subside into a stagnant state and refused to follow the example set in Wall street. Copper stocks exhibited the greater part of the stiffening tendency.

Wall Street Sets Lead.

At the immediate start in New York the course which was to be followed during the day was perceptible, and in the first hour Union Pacific and some of the other railroad stocks advanced over a point. This advance became general as the hour wore on and it was not until after 11 o'clock that the bouyancy showed the slightest signs of subsiding, and then profit taking was the cause.

With the publication of the bank statement, however, the market recovered most all the losses and at the close of the two hours the highest prices of the entire day were in evidence. This continued up to the very last minute and the profit taking was offset almost entirely by the covering of quite a few members of the short clique.

Although the surplus of the New York banks suffered another decrease, as was shown by the statement of those institutions, this factor was encouraging, as heretofore the decrease in the surplus has been running up to the million mark almost weekly. Last week the decrease reached the nominal sum of $466,650. There was another decrease in the loan item of $4,012,000, which was accompanied by a loss in the deposits in the banks of $9,485,000.

Bankers Expectant.

In these two items is clearly reflected the unsettled condition in the monetary situation in this country. The cash holdings in the banks were not affected seriously last week, and the amount lost by the banks in this respect was under $3,000,000, of which amount specie lost $1,348,000 and legal tender $1,259,100.

The bankers are expectant that next week will show a decided improvement in the monetary situation. There is a sentimental easing off in rates noticeable, but as yet this tendency has only reached the sentimental stage, although it is hoped that next week will see a mark down in both New York and Boston.

Reading Gains 3 Points.

Reading, Union Pacific, United States Steel and Pennsylvania Railroad were among the most active issues in the New York market. Reading was the leader, and with 5[illegible],000 shares to its credit advanced almost three points on the day's transactions, the lowest price being 79⅝, and the highest price touched 82. The closing price was 81⅞.

Union Pacific was strong, opening at 109 5-8 and touching its highest price, 112½, soon after. The trading in this stock was fairly active and over 42,000 shares changed hands.

There was an advance in United States Steel of 1⅛ points.

Pennsylvania was another one of the features, the price advancing 2½ points, from 108 to 110½. Amalgamated showed a consistent increase on large short covering and gained 2 points. General Electric advanced over 3 points on the sale of a few over 600 shares.

The statement of President Schwerin of the Pacific Mail Company that there was a possibility of that company being forced out of the Pacific steamship trade on account of the conditions now ruling had a decided effect on that stock, and while the rest of the market was going to higher levels this stock showed a tendency to sell off.

Coppers Hub Feature.

The copper stocks were the main feature of yesterday's Boston Stock Market. The tone of the market was very good, and on some fair sales the price showed a substantial advance. Amalgamated was the most prominent feature, and there was more interest apparent in this stock than in any of the others. The trading was mostly in odd lots. The advance of this stock was not carried to any great extent and was contained in a point and a half limit.

On offerings by Paine, Webber & Co., and Richardson, Hill & Co., accompanied by some fairly large buying by [illegible] & Brooks and Bright, Sears & Co., North Butte was forced into the market to some extent, and the stock managed to regain some of the losses which it sustained during the early part of the week.

$2 Electric Dividend.

U. S. Steel reflected partially the interest manifested in the shares in Wall street, and ranked among the most nearly active members of the list. The opening price on this stock was 23½ and 24 was touched before the close of the market.

The declaration of the General Electric dividend of $2 had a very good effect on the stock in the larger market and on some fairly good transactions the stock advanced 3 points. The dividend is payable January 15, to stock of December 7.

The regular quarterly dividend of $2.25 was declared by the directors of the Boston & Albany Railroad. The dividend is payable on December 31 to stock of date of November 30 and is the regular disbursement declared for this period of the year.

Osceola Optimistic.

Advices from the Osceola Mine are very optimistic in regard to the conditions reigning at that property, and it is reported that active work is going on in connection with the operating of fourteen drills of the company. The Old Osceola Branch of the mine is sending 600 tons of rock to the mills daily from No. 5 shaft. The electric light service recently installed is doing good work as is also the compressed air apparatus which has been lately added to the mine equipment.

There is still a very large demand from an investment clientele noticeable in regard to the shares of the United Fruit Company and the stock was well taken up during the week. Yesterday the shares were prominent in the trading, and it was one of the few stocks outside of the copper stock class which showed any inclination toward activity.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET

BONDS.

RISE IN PRICES MAY PRESAGE BOOM.

By Thomas C. Shotwell.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—As a result of certain extensions of loans made Friday, but not even yet officially admitted, the stock market began to-day what promises to be a very substantial advance. Whether this is the real beginning of the big boom in the market, not even those who are foremost in the present movement can say. But it looks good enough to cause some conservative bankers, who have been keeping their clients out, to advise the purchase of stocks.

There is no doubt that considerable liquidation will be attempted on the advance, for hundreds of wealthy men are still in desperate circumstances. The bankers who are advising the purchase of stocks, therefore, advise also the taking of reasonable profits.

Reasons for the attempt to force an advance are the accumulated benefits of the many things that have recently been done to aid the financial situation. Nearly $100,000,000 of gold has been imported or engaged for import. Several dangerous pools have been eliminated. Several banks and trust companies have been tided over. Several bad men have been wiped off the financial earth. And last of all the government issues are an assured success.

GOV. GUILD PROMISES MILK INVESTIGATION

Tells Farmers He Will Ask Legislature to Appoint Commission.

Worcester, Nov. 23.—Governor Curtis Guild has promised the milk producing farmers of Worcester that he will ask the next session of the General Court to appoint a commission to make a thorough investigation of the milk situation in the Commonwealth and to make suggestions whereby conditions may be improved and justice done to both farmer and consumer.

In a letter received by General C. W. Wood here to-day the Governor promises that he will interest himself in the milk situation and do all in his power to have the Legislature have the whole matter thoroughly considered.

Owing to the fact that the milk transportation hearing before the State Railway Commission in Boston has not yet been concluded the committee of five appointed by the committee of sixteen milk producers to consider the question of organizing and incorporating an independent milk concern was not able to report to-day. It will not do so until some time next week.

If the Governor does not act and have Dr. Harrington throw open the records of his office to the agents of the Worcester milk farmers, General Wood declares that he will petition at once for the removal of Dr. Harrington from office on the ground that he is using his office in the interests of the Boston Milk Trust.

During this week General Wood has received, so he says, 127 complaints of milk producers that they are being oppressed by the State Board of Health in favor of the Boston Milk Trust. The farmers complain that C. Brigham & Sons of Boston are at the bottom of the greater number of the reprimands they have received from the State Board of Health. These letters are all to be called to the attention of the Governor by General Wood.

CARLOADS OF JUICY TURKEYS ARE COMING

Several carloads of plump bone and corn fed Thanksgiving turkeys are en route to Boston to be disposed of during the three shopping days before Thursday at the Ginter stores.

A specialty is being made of Thanksgiving pure foods at these stores. Shelves, counters and cases have been loaded down with new stocks, bought especially for the Thanksgiving season.

The stores are humming with activity on account of the special sales of food products, including fruits, nuts, crackers, candies and other accessories to the holiday feast. The supply seems practically inexhaustible. The prices have been arranged so as to attract particular attention from those seeking a good home dinner for Thursday.

BIDS WIFE GOODBYE DRINKS POISON DOSE

Lynn, Nov. 23.—"Good-bye, I'm going now!" exclaimed John Mason to his wife, in their home at No. 68 Church street this noon, and entering his room, drank the contents of a bottle of sulpho-naptho.

His wife thought at first that he was simply going down street, but decided to investigate, and found him lying unconscious on his bed with the empty poison bottle nearby on the door.

She called the police, who removed him to the Lynn Hospital in the ambulance. After several hours he was resuscitated.

CHICAGO FOR CONVENTION?

French Lick Springs, Ind., Nov. 23.—Chairman Thomas T. Taggart's house party began breaking up to-day with the general understanding that Chicago is to get the next national Democratic convention. The delegations from other cities were being used as stalking horses, but that was the apparent fact. A decision in favor of Chicago had virtually been made before the meeting here was called. All the eastern, middle west and southern members of the national committee want the big gathering to go to Chicago

Gossip as to candidates and platforms wore itself out last night, the members having settled to their own satisfaction at least, that Bryan and tariff reform are to be the combination. Frank Morgan of New York tried to do a little press agent work for Lieutenant Governor Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, but was not greatly encouraged.

BIG LAND FRAUDS BLOCKED BY PROBE

—WEBSTER

Representative Walter A. Webster, who has made an exhaustive study of Boston's financial condition, talked yesterday about Mayor Fitzgerald's plea in Faneuil Hall for a second term in which the Mayor promised to improve on his first.

"Amazing effrontery," is what Webster said of the Fitzgerald speech when Webster could get his breath after reading it

Sought to Buy at 300 Per Cent.

"Mayor Fitzgerald doesn't inform the public that his administration sought to buy land at the corner of Commonwealth avenue and Wade street for Evergreen Cemetery at the enormous price of $45,286.75, when it was assessed for only $15,000

"The amount sought to be paid was 300 per cent of the assessed valuation"

Fitzgerald, in Faneuil Hall, comparing the land sales of his own administration with the land deals of previous administrations, boasted that the Fitzgerald purchases were at only 18¼ per cent. above the assessed valuations.

Not Fitzgerald's Fault.

"The Mayor doesn't mention," Webster says, "he attempted purchase of the Fottler land on Canterbury and Morton streets for $1[illegible]5,000, or 600 per cent. of its assessed valuation of $21,400. Neither is any mention made by Fitzgerald of the attempted addition to Mt. Hope Cemetery, at the fat price of $44,174, of land assessed for $11,500, or 380 per cent of its assessed value.

"In other words, if what Mayor Fitzgerald actually did purchase in the way of land was at only 18¼ per cent. above its assessed valuation, it was not his fault If he and his lieutenants had their way the city would have paid 120 per cent. above the assessed valuation."

LEAGUE NOMINATES TICKET IN LYNN

Members of the Independence League of Lynn formally opened their municipal campaign last night at an enthusiastic meeting in Lee Hall, which was crowded to the doors. William A. Kelley, the well-known labor leader, was nominated for the mayoralty. He is also the Democratic nominee.

Although nominations for all of the other city offices were not made last night, a special committee authorized to fill all the vacancies on the ticket was appointed to report at the meeting next Tuesday night. Arrangements were made to open permanent headquarters for the Independence League in this city

The other nominations made are as follows:

For Aldermen—Ward three, Medley T Holdsworth, Fred C. Beach; Ward four, Thomas F Curry, Daniel D. Beard; Ward six, Michael P Ward; Ward seven, James E. Rich.

For Comissioner of Public Works for three years, Hon Walter L. Ramsdell.

For assessor for three years, Hon Asa T Newhall

For School Committee, Ward two, Mial W Chase; Ward three, Oliver C. Willcomb; Ward five, Mrs. May L. Shelton.

For Common Council, Ward 4, Edmund B. Kiley, George A Merrill.

Following the nominations a committee was appointed to secure permanent headquarters for the League, and to report at the Tuesday night meeting with a declaration of principles founded on the campaign slogan, "common honesty, common decency and common sense."

At to-night's meeting ex Mayor Ramsdell presided, and Thomas C. Crowley was secretary.

PIANO BUYERS Are Getting Wise

They are studying the situation—the piano situation. They are beginning to get wise to the fact that the Piano Trust is not in the piano business for its health—not so as you would notice it. A man or woman wishing to buy a high grade piano goes into the high price piano district and after getting the price on some special piano at a half dozen piano warerooms, finds out that the high price is the same in each place. It gradually sinks into the mind of the buyer that there is no competition in price on this special piano. Why? Simple reasoning tells the story. The piano is a trust piano—all the dealers called upon are in an agreement to hold up the price. Simple, isn't it? We have been telling you this truth for about two years. We are the only house in New England that sells the leading pianos at cut prices. We are the only Piano House that has the nerve to fight the Piano Trust. Help us lick it. Give us a chance to show you any piano you want at a big cut in price. Truthfully and respectfully, ☞ Don't get the impression that only second-hand Pianos can be had at these sales—as a matter of fact we sometimes sell the entire stock of new Pianos of some small dealer who, through force of circumstances, was obliged to "shut up shop," store his stock, and finally let it go. We have hundreds of new Pianos that in the "course of events" come up in the salesrooms to be sacrificed.

Government Positions

The Government offers better opportunities for steady, lucrative employment than any private company or corporation. We can train you in your own home during your leisure time to obtain one of these positions. Uncle Sam's employees are not subject to financial stringencies nor business depressions.

The examinations for Railway Mail clerks and Custom House clerks will be held in the Spring. NOW is the time to begin preparation. Remember, the first appointments go to those who head the list. If you wish to see your name among the top-notchers, take a course with the Massachusetts Correspondence Schools. DON'T BE A TAIL-ENDER. Our instruction is practical, direct and thorough. Each instructor is an expert in his particular branch. Students are personally guided through their courses. Send at once for free information on Civil Service positions and their salaries.

First.—All official appointments of heads of departments shall be made with an eye only to the qualifications and experience of the applicants and the requirements of the positions to be filled, and no appointment shall be made on account of or as a reward for political services.

Second.—All appointees shall be held to a strict accountability for the honest and efficient administration of their respective departments in accordance with the principles herein laid down.

Third.—All subordinate appointments by myself, or by the heads of departments, shall be made upon a strictly civil service basis.

Fourth. All contracts for public work or supplies, whether large or small, shall be awarded upon a strictly competitive basis.

Fifth. While I shall protect every honest working employee of the city, I shall, without quarter, dismiss every "student" and grafter taking the citizens' money without labor.

Sixth. I pledge myself not to approve, except in case of emergency, any increase in the tremendous net debt of the city, and will endeavor to establish a policy looking to its gradual extinguishment.

That, fellow citizens, in brief, is my platform. I have elaborated upon that in my public utterances before, and will continue to discuss it during the campaign.

Brands False Publication.

Before taking up the subject that I intend to discuss this evening in detail, I wish to say that a statement concerning my legislative record, which appeared Thursday evening in one of the Boston papers, is absolutely and unqualifiedly false. My record is as clear as day, and I am preparing a complete statement of my votes on all measures during the three years that I was in the Legislature, which, when they are published, will show that such statements, inspired as they doubtless were, unjustified, misleading and untrue.

The matter that I intend to discuss in detail this evening was touched upon by me in my letter of acceptance. In an ante-election promise of the present Mayor contained in an advertisement in the Boston American, December 11, 1905, it is stated:

> "My election will mean: Lower taxes, the escape of Boston from the bosses' yoke; the control of the people by private and corporate interests will cease."

The expression "the control of the people by private and corporate interests will cease," meant two things. First, that the people were at that time controlled by private and corporate interests; and second, that his election to the office of Mayor would put an end to such control. In connection with that implied statement and that express promise let me direct your attention to certain things in connection with the advertising, its nature and extent, of the weekly newspaper, The Republic, owned and controlled by the present Mayor of this city.

So much has been spoken and written concerning the Mayor's weekly newspaper, The Republic, so much that is true, so much that is false, so much that is partly true and partly false, that in the interest of truth, to which both the Mayor and the public are entitled, I have had made a study of the paper's advertising columns for the purpose of learing the facts, and any inferences to be drawn from the facts I leave to you and the other voters of the city of Boston.

Will State the Facts.

I shall try to be fair and accurate in stating the facts without exaggeration, without misrepresentation and without malice. I do not say that the Mayor of this city ought not to be engaged in the business of publishing a weekly newspaper, or that it is impossible to conduct such an enterprise without harm to the interests of the people he represents in his official position.

While there is Scriptural authority for the statement that no man can serve two masters I admit that an honest and high-minded official may serve the public well while retaining his interest in a newspaper which he publishes. Whether the Mayor of our city is neglecting his master, the public, in order to serve his other master, self-interest, is a question which the facts to be now stated by me may furnish an answer.

CHAPTER 1.

The investigation of the advertising in The Republic covers a period from January 1, 1905 and September 1, 1907, and is complete except as to seven numbers, which could not be obtained; to wit, five in 1905, one in 1906 and one in 1907.

A deadly comparison will be made between the advertising in the year 1905, when the publisher of the paper was a private citizen, and the year 1906 and eight months of the year 1907, when the publisher was Mayor of the City of Boston.

Three topics will be discussed:

First, advertisements of the city of Boston; second, advertisements of banking institutions having deposits of city funds, and, third, advertisements of public service corporations doing business or asking favors of the city of Boston.

Character of the Advertising Medium.

The Republic is a weekly periodical devoted mainly to discussion of political, social and religious matters; its circulation is local and its amount is not known definitely, but is supposed to be about 2,500 per week. According to Rowell's Directory of American Newspapers for 1906 it was rated as then having a circulation of 2,250 copies per week.

There is nothing in its reading matter, or the style in which it is written which on merit alone would command attention or secure patronage. If it depended on merit for its existence it would have lived obscurely for a brief period, but would have been added to the list of defunct weeklies long ago. Whatever prosperity it enjoys, which did not arise spontaneously within the circle of the publisher's friends, relatives or political associates, is due to his personal influence and activity. How far reaching and compelling this influence is the expanding columns of advertising matter show.

Character of its Advertising Matter.

The first thing to arrest attention is the large number of advertisements of banking concerns in a paper which circulates largely among those whose financial dealings must necessarily be small.

Another feature equally striking is the large number of advertisements of public service corporations. The character of these is such as to suggest that the advertising is not expected to bring returns from those who read the paper, but rather from those who publish it. There is also a large number of advertisements of merchants who apparently were not familiar with the limited constituency of the weekly. And, of course, the expectant dealer in city supplies found his way into the advertising columns.)

Public Office Promotes Prosperity.

In the year 1905 its owner held no official position. On January 1, 1906, he assumed the office of Mayor of the city of Boston. After he announced his candidacy for Mayor in 1905 there seemed to be an awakening on the part of certain advertisers to the value of the paper as an advertising agency, and the growth of these advertisements in number and size during his term of office shows how easily a pushing publisher may promote his prosperity. The increase has not been confined to public service corporations, banking houses and merchants; even the heads of city departments suddenly became aroused to the value of this advertising medium.

City Advertising.

In 1905, before the publisher was Mayor, there were thirty-five city of Boston advertisements in the Republic.

In 1906, the first year of his administration, there were 202, an increase of 477 per cent. in the number of advertisements and 480 per cent. in the quantity of advertising matter.

In eight months of the current year—1907—ending August 31, there were fifty-two advertisements.

1905 .... 103¾
1906 .... 599⅝
1907 (eight months, 108⅛

The apparent falling off in 1907 is partly accounted for by the fact that the first eight months of the year are not the heaviest advertising months. Thus, in the first eight months of 1906 there were ninety-seven advertisements, or less than half of the total of 202 for the year.

It may also be partly accounted for by the fact that there will be an election this Fall and that it may have been thought unwise to have too much municipal advertising in the weekly publication of the Mayor this year.

Of the 202 advertisements in the year 1906, 141 were published by the Street Commissioner's Department, with a total of 321 column inches, or about twenty times as much as in the year 1905, when there were only six advertisements with 16⅝ column inches.

In the first eight months of 1907 this department's advertisements fell to fifteen, with a total of 37⅞ column inches.

The city's advertisements of notices of hearings relating to franchises of the Boston Elevated Railway Company before the Board of Aldermen were in 1905 two, with a total of 9½ inches; in 1906, eighteen, with a total of 135⅞ inches, and in the first eight months of 1907 two, with a total of 14¼ inches.

The question may well be raised in this connection whether it is good policy to make the public rely for information regarding proposed extensions of franchises and the granting of new ones, upon a weekly paper of this character rather than upon the daily papers.

It may be interesting to add a word here, though it seems a digression, which will show a new way by which the head of this machine may profit by the use of the machinery.

The advertising of the Boston Democratic City Committee in The Republic in the three years is as follows:

1905 ....77½ column inches
1906 ....179 " "
1907, Jan. 12 to Oct. 26, inclusive.......203 " "

Eternal vigilance is the price of prosperity!

Bank Advertising.

I now call your attention to the class of advertisers which has important business relations with the municipal corporation.

The city deposits millions of dollars of its current and sinking funds in the Boston banks and the business of this most desirable customer is as eagerly sought by wide awake bankers as their advertising business is sought by the wide awake publisher of The Republic. That a profitable reciprocity exists between the Mayor and the bankers is shown by comparing the number of bankers who advertise in The Republic with the number who receive deposits of city funds.

Of the banks and trust companies which printed advertisements in the Mayor's paper during his term of office, only seven had neither current funds or sinking funds of the city on deposit on the first of last July. Kidder, Peabody & Co., Lee, Higginson & Co., E. H. Rollins & Son, the Washington Trust Company and three savings banks—the Boston Five Cent, the Union Institution for Savings and the Wildey Savings are the seven institutions which had no city money on deposit.

The first three are private bankers and would not be likely to obtain deposits of city funds; nor would the three savings banks, so these six concerns are not open to the suspicion that they advertised in the hope of receiving deposits of city money.

There were, however, nineteen banking houses which have been advertisers in The Republic and which have held deposits of the city's money.

They are the American Loan and Trust Company, the Bay State Trust Company, the Beacon Trust Company, the Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Company, the City Trust Company, the Commonwealth Trust Company, the Federal Trust Company, the First National Bank, the Merchants National Bank, the National Bank of the Republic, the National Shawmut Bank, the New England National Bank, the New England Trust Company, the Old Colony Trust Company, the Second National Bank, the State National Bank, the Webster and Atlas National Bank, the Eliot National Bank, the Mechanics Trust Company.

Of these nineteen concerns, only eight advertised in The Republic in 1905; the other eleven who had been in the dark in 1905 are now clearly in the light of the election and advertised generously in 1906.

The bank advertisements rose swiftly in volume, the 981½ column inches of such in 1905 growing to 2,312 in 1906, or from about seventeen to about forty whole pages, which is an increase of 135 per cent.

Not a bad showing for a weekly paper of small circulation which has no financial news of importance and is not recognized as having any influence or authority in financial matters. What arguments moved the bankers, or what inducements were held out to them will never be told, for bankers are a canny lot, so that must be left to the imagination of the voters.

A list of banks is appended which shows the amount of their advertising in the two years and eight months from January 1, 1905, to September 1, 1907.

I have given you a bald statement of the facts in the case and on Monday night I shall draw some deadly comparisons between the advertisements of the following public service corporations in the columns of The Republic in the year 1905, and in the year and eight months of its publisher's administration as Mayor.

Public Service Advertisers.

The Boston Elevated Railway Company, which in the year 1906 was seeking valuable franchise rights for an elevated structure in the West End; the Boston & Maine Railroad and the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, which were interested in a merger of both roads; the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, which was on the gridiron of public opinion because of poor train service of the Boston & Albany Railroad, and which was threatened with a cancellation of its lease; the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, which has a valuable lighting contract with the city of Boston under the terms of which a Board of Arbitrators has recently fixed the price of electric light in our streets and municipal buildings for five years; the American Bell Telephone Company, and its subsidiary companies; the New England Telephone & Telegraph Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company, whose very existence was at stake in 1906 when the Board of Aldermen voted to grant a franchise to the Home Telephone Company, which franchise was vetoed by the present Mayor.

Mayor Fitzgerald and Postmaster George H. Hibbard were not without friends and representatives at last night's rally. The Fitzgerald and the Hibbard forces each had a spokesman, whose mission it seemed to be to disturb or break up the Coulthurst rally in the Coulthurst ward.

What the pro-Fitzgerald disturber had to say was never made quite plain. The Hibbard man wanted to know "How about Hibbard?"

Each of the disturbers had the poor judgment, or the bad luck, to choose as his time for an exhibition the period allotted by Chairman James Worth to Lawyer John J. Walsh, Republican. And, long before Walsh got through, each of them was probably willing to admit that he was "sorry he spoke."

The other speakers included the Hon. John K. Berry former State Senator, Republican; Clement L. Pollock, of the Independence League, and John A. Kenney, a prominent League worker in the ward organization.

This big, new periodical is backed by all the unlimited resources of a colossal publishing organization—comprising, as it does, three of the greatest monthly magazines of their kind published, and, in addition, eight great metropolitan dailies scattered over the breadth of the land. It is now the management's intention to make their new monthly, AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE, as distinctive as their newspapers—in other words, the greatest magazine of its kind published. Therefore, there will appear in this new monthly the great $75,000.00 editorials, written by one of the highest paid newspaper men in the world, in addition to the wonderful art features, the provokingly funny color cartoons, the screamingly odd Happy Hooligan, Buster Brown, And Her Name Was Maud, and the dozen and one other marvelous creations of those master minds of mirth and fun—Opper, Dirks, Bunny, Outcault and all the rest. Of the magazine's great editorial writers only a few of the dozens upon dozens can here be mentioned. Among these are: ELLA WHEELER WILCOX, the most brilliant woman in contemporary American life; DINKELSPIEL—the inimitable—the man who has set all the world a-laughing; MAURICE MAETERLINCK, Belgium's foremost living philosopher and litterateur; CLARA MORRIS, the noted actress, who will write of life on the stage and of the busy world; [illegible] GARRETT P. SERVISS, who has magically transformed the mysteries of science into tales of marvelous romance, and BEATRICE FAIRFAX, the most brilliant, cleverest woman who has ever written on love, romance, and the things of the heart. These are but A FEW of the master minds who will contribute regularly to the great new monthly. For the strange, the bizarre, the unlike, the fascinating, read the brilliantly interesting new AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE. ELKS WHO ARRANGED MEMORIAL

Members of Boston Lodge No. 10, who served as committee to arrange services to be held in Majestic Theatre next Sunday.

NOTABLES HONOR ELKS' MEMORIAL

Impressive Services to Be Held in Majestic Theatre on Next Sunday.

GUILD AMONG THE GUESTS

In dignity and impressive solemnity the public memorial service of the Boston Elks at the Majestic Theatre next Sunday afternoon will be the most imposing Elks' memorial ever held in Boston.

The State of Massachusetts will be represented by Governor Guild, the city of Boston by Mayor Fitzgerald, the army by Lieutenant General Nelson A. Miles, the former general commanding, and the navy by Captain William Swift, commandant of the Charlestown navy yard. Other distinguished guests will occupy box seats.

Judge Michael J. Murray will deliver the memorial oration. A unique feature of the observance will be the appearance of a mixed choir of boys and girls, gowned in surplices, who will sing under the direction of Professor John A. O'Shea, who has arranged a splendid musical program.

The theatre doors will be opened at 1.30 o'clock. James P. Murphy of No. 242 Dover street, who has charge of the ticket distribution, has already had an unusual demand for the invitations upon which admission will be permitted.

The program has been arranged by a committee of Boston Lodge No. 10, consisting of Lawrence H. Sullivan, chairman; James P. Murphy, secretary; Captain John J. Hanley, Luke D. Mullen and Major Patrick F. O'Keefe.

The officers of the lodge who will participate in the service are: Lawrence H. Sullivan, exalted ruler; George H. Johnson, Charles P. Hurley and William M. Murphy, E. L. K.; Patrick F. O'Keefe, esquire; George H. Dooley, inner guard; Oscar Shaffer, tyler; James H. Gallivan, Captain John Hanley and John W. Linnehan, trustees.

The committee has spared neither time nor money in its preparation for the commemoration of the dead of the lodge.

AMERICA'S LARGEST LIBERAL HOME FURNISHER

Announcement Extraordinary!

Most Liberal and Sweeping Offer Ever Made to Credit Furniture Buyers in the Country

Protection Guaranteed to Widows and Orphans

BEGINNING November 25, 1907, and continuing until March 1, 1908, we propose to put into operation a policy of free insurance, so broad and generous, that its terms never have been approached by any furniture store in the United States.

Many a man of moderate income has hesitated about incurring an obligation of $100 or more for furnishing his home by the thought that in case of his death his widow might be unable to continue the payments. Our most liberal free insurance plan, which we now propose to put into operation, removes this element of uncertainty, for we agree, on all credit purchases made of us between November 25, 1907, and March 1, 1908, amounting to not more than $500, in case of the death of a customer, from any cause,

TO RECEIPT THE BALANCE DUE ON HIS (OR HER) ACCOUNT IN FULL, the only condition being that the customer must be the wage earner of the family and that payments have been made according to the terms agreed upon at the time of purchase.

We are not philanthropists; this is simply a business proposition. We may lose thousands of dollars in receipting credit accounts, but we believe that the large and immediate increase in our business from new customers will more than offset the losses. At any rate, we are willing to try it until March 1, 1908.

At the Throat of the Republic!

Charles Edward Russell tells of that greatest of dangers to American citizens, the election frauds. He describes how this great crime is organized and systematically worked.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson, the eminent medical writer, flatly contradicts the oft-made assertion that the corset and the low-neck dress are great menaces to health.

Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, Director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art of New York, writes about the greatest private art collection in the world. Profusely illustrated.
